Getting Civilized, Almost But, Those Ladies When Cox Travels Beware Carbon Dioxide

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1920.

Marvelous experiments have been made by telephoning without wires. Carried by waves of that electricity of which we know only that it exists, traveling through the ether that is in and around everything and yet is only scientific speculation, the voice of man, with its tones easily recognized, travels more that a thousand miles.

We shall talk around the world with and without wires, and sail around the world in the air, taking up from the ground motive power, without wires to bring it.

You meet the young men that have come out of college, the thoughtful few, hear what science and mathematics have been telling them, and say to yourself: "This world at last is really getting civilized." Then you read of a riot in Bedford Reformatory for Girls. Sweet womanhood, white and colored, started a fight in the laundry. White women did not want to be locked up with the black women. The black, quite naturally, felt that they could be just as "respectable" reformatory inmates as the whites.

Clubs, knives and flatirons were used. The reformatory is half a wreck, dozens went to the hospitals, etc. Then you say: "It is not what the few men and women know and do, not what the scientist accomplished in his laboratory that tells the story, but what the fifteen hundred millions on earth think and feel that counts." There can be no real civilization without average civilization, and that is so low that it is not civilization at all.

The big power, most dreaded on earth, just now, is Bolshevism, made up of 80 per cent. unable to read or think, more than two hundred millions of them, and a few, Lenin and others, frankly confessing that they are using the ignorant mass, their hatreds and brutality, in the effort to attain world dominion. The federation of man and parliament of the world are still distant.

Governor Cox will visit many States on his campaign, beating all "whirlwind tour" records. Each State should and will, silently or audibly, ask him this question: What do you think of the United States as a League of Nations? Is not a league of forty-eight good, big countries, reaching across a continent, inhabited by 105,000,000 people, all enjoying free trade within the national boundaries, all with exactly the same interests, a pretty big league in itself?

Would it not be a mistake to wipe out that league, its independence, its right to manage its own affairs without advice or consent from the outside, in order to join something indefinite?

Can we not use, manage and make useful our men and all our money without getting a European association to tell us how they should be spent?

Europe is facing and fearing another war, against Bolshevism to the northeast, fanaticism throughout Asia, internal upheavals in every great nation without exception. Is this the time for us to say: "We want to be partners in all you do and have you allot us our share of the work?"

To mind our own business in America and let Europe attend to its affairs has been good advice every day since Washington gave it, but never such good advice as now.

Mr. Cox says that if he is made President he will endeavor to deliver to Europe "everything that President Wilson promised." Mr. Cox presumably knows just what was promised, but the crowd, whose voice he asks, do not know. He should tell them in detail all about it, just what the promises were.

Yesterday, in a moment of relaxation, the learned Judge Shearn explained to his children and to others a plan of obtaining gasoline plentifully and cheaply from oil, from what he called the "cracking process." There were many scientific details, all about molecules of different elements, their curious affinities for each other. The judge's short talk was a lesson in chemistry and more. It was a lesson to judges that sit in stuffy court rooms, to all American business men dying too young by carbon-dioxide poisoning.

In Judge Shearn's story you learned that the problem in making first-class gasoline by that "cracking process" is to get rid of the carbon. Some one recalling that a molecule of oxygen at four points of contact gathers up and carries off a molecule of carbon, asked: "Why can't you force oxygen into the gasoline and let it carry off the carbon?" And there you have a good scientific idea.

Apply that to your own pair of lungs. Force in oxygen, enough of it to carry off the poisonous carbonic accumulations in the blood, and you will have solved more than half the problem of long life. To purify your own blood by "forcing oxygen into it" through the lung tissues, is the most important work of the man who wants full energy and full results.

GIRLS QUESTIONED ON "AUTO RING"

BARNEY'S FRIEND IS GRILLED

Marion O'Brien Among Those Interviewed; Police Keep Back Their Names

A number of young women, including Marion O'Brien, former sweetheart of Herman L. Barney, were grilled by Assistant District Attorney George Stanley Harvey of Middlesex County today in regard to the "auto theft ring."

Attorney Harvey refused to make public the names or the women, on the ground that while they were furnishing valuable information, they were not implicated. It was learned, however, that the O'Brien woman was one of those interested.

The questioning took place at the office of the district attorney at East Cambridge, in preparation for the grand jury hearing next week. It was stated that the grand jurors have been ordered to assemble on Monday to take up additional cases together with some on the regular docket.

RESOLUTE FAVORITE AT 4 TO 1

Selection of Course Favors the American Yacht—Lipton Still Confident

By FRANCIS J. WHITE
By International News Service

Sandy Hook, N. J., July 26—A light northwesterly breeze was blowing early today and conditions appeared ideal for the staging of the deciding race between Shamrock IV. and Resolute for America's cup.

Betting on the final contest had the Resolute a 4 to 1 favorite and even money was being wagered that she would capture the race regardless of her time allowance, which will remain at 6 minutes 40 seconds.

Today's course was fifteen miles to windward and the same distance to leeward, and it was this type of race in which Reading showed to such advantage on the two previous occasions it was sailed.

In the first race she was winning hands down when her throat halyards

Wood Asks "Square Deal" for Mills

William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Company, told the American today he didn't know whether our next suit or overcoat is going to be cheaper or whether it will cost us still more money.

He said he wished he did. Then he could get more orders, put to work 40,000 workers now idle in his fifty-four mills and help them earn money to raise them through the high cost of living.

He also said among other things in an amazingly frank interview with the American that he was not a profiteer, the American Woolen Company wasn't, that both were the abject servants of the great law of supply and demand and that it was his chief aim in life to so manage the American Woolen Company that its prosperity would bring added prosperity and happiness to his 40,000 employes.

Coming as they did from one who has been recently indicted as a profiteer by the United States Government, who has been criticised at home and abroad as one responsible for the

IDENTIFY DETROIT VICTIM

Woman in "Trunk" Murder Mystery Katherine Jackson of Mississsippi

Chicago, July 26.—Patrolman Leo Trumbull of the Detroit police department failed upon his arrival here to identify Roy Millen, arrested Sunday on a "tip" from Detroit as "Eugene Leroy," chief suspect in the trunk murder mystery.

By International News Service.

Detroit, Mich., July 26.—Solution of the New York-Detroit trunk murder mystery, and the arrest of the slayer of the woman found in the gruesome container, appeared much nearer today following the positive identification of the wearing apparel found in the trunk-coffin as that of Katherine Jackson of Starkville, Miss., known in this city as Mrs. Eugene Leroy.

Acting on information from Birmingham, furnished by the International News Service, Chief of Detectives Edward H. Fox and the homicide squad quickly located four persons who knew the Leroys in this city and who identified both the man and woman's clothing, as well as giving other information that corresponded with the stories of A. A. Tatum in Birmingham and A. J. Bernie, New York expressman.

Policeman Leo Trumbull and his wife, Olive, told members of the homicide squad that they had met Katherine Jackson on Oct. 30, 1919 at the Interurban Hotel. Two nights later they met Eugene Leroy. The hotel records show that both Katherine Jackson of Nashville, Tenn. and

Seek Missing Dedham Boy in Stoughton

A boy answering the description of Ralph Mooers, twelve years old, who has been missing from his home at Dedham since Friday, was seen to board a train at Canton for Stoughton on Saturday, according to a report received today by Chief of Police Rhine of Dedham from Station Agent Sadler at Canton.

The youth told him, Sadler said, that he was going to join his folks, who had moved to Stoughton. The Mooers boy's parents are both dead and he has made his home with an uncle, Richard Peters, at Dedham.

Mooers was with a party of boys picking blueberries when he disappeared. At the time he wore khaki pants and blouse and carried a four-quart pail. He has an impediment in his speech. The station agent said that the youth who bought a ticket there answered all of these details of description.

The uncle, accompanied by Police Officer Oscar Henning of Dedham, went to Stoughton today to search that district.

2 BURNED IN FIRE AT BEACH

Nearby Houses Threatened When Cottage Is Destroyed at Nantasket

Several cottages on Nantasket Beach were threatened early today by a fire which destroyed the residences of William H. White at Police officer on Mast street. Mrs. White and her fourteen-year-old daughter, Edna May, were severely burned trying to extinguish the flames resulting from the explosion of a gasoline stove. They were given first aid treatment at the Sturgis Hospital.

The firemen were handicapped by low water pressure, but a favorable wind prevented the fire from spreading to adjoining cottages, which are congested in that district. The only articles in the house saved were a Bible, a chair and some clothing.

Mrs. White was preparing breakfast on the gasoline stove when it exploded. She attempted to throw it out of the kitchen, and in so doing was burned about the arms and head. The daughter was burned while attempting to assist her mother.

TIE CASHIER AND STEAL $12,000

Holdup in Central Falls Bank Discovered by Girl; Police Have Auto Number

Central Falls, R. I., July 26.—Four armed robbers raided La Credite Union Bank on Sales street and got away with $12,000 in cash. Cashier Omar Collette was forced to stand face to the wall by the robbers, who tied and gagged him and locked him in the office when they left.

The robbers walked leisurely out of the bank and drove away in an automobile, which, according to witnesses, bore the Rhode Island number 30714.

The robbery, one of the boldest bank holdups in years, was discovered when a young woman entered the bank to make a deposit. Finding no one at the receiver's window, she looked into the little office and saw Collette helpless.

She ran to the home of Legge Morrisette, president of the bank, who gave the police alarm and went to the office and released the cashier.

Collette was unable to give a good description of the bandits, further than to say that one of them wore a red sweater. They were noticed changing their coats as they drove away. He said they entered the bank shortly after opening time, and one of them asked about rates of exchange. When he looked up from his books he found himself covered with a revolver. He was roughly handled as he fought the men who tied and gagged him.

A general alarm was immediately

WOOD BRANDS CHARGES AGAINST HIM AS 'ALL PROPAGANDA'

CLAIMS U. S. 'BOOKKEEPER' CONDUCTED MILL PROBE

abnormally high price of clothing Mr. Wood's statements threw a new light on the man himself and the huge business he directs.

Mr. Wood has told before of the cancellation of orders compelling him to close his Lawrence mills, of the spotlight of publicity thrown upon his business by the Department of Justice and of its harmful effects.

But it is the clear way that he tells of the "double" government he brought upon him through his profiteering charges that is interesting. In telling the story Mr. Wood does not make any charges. He relates what happened between his company and the Department of Justice and lets his hearer draw his own inferences.

"It was about the time we were opening our business for our next run that I got in touch with Howard E. Figg, special assistant to Attorney General Palmer," said Mr. Wood, "and told him we were about to set our prices for the next run and would like to get the advice of the department as to what it thought would be fair prices to set upon our goods.

"Mr. Figg though well of the idea, said he would take it up with Mr. Palmer and I later was informed that Mr. Figg planned to come over and confer with me. Later Mr. Figg wrote he was too busy to come here, couldn't leave New York.

"I was pretty busy here, told him so and he promised to send a man over to advise with me. Naturally I thought the man sent was going to be a business man, one who understood business conditions, knew something about the woolen business and one who would give me the department's ideas on the prices we should set on our goods.

"One day some time later a man came into my office, said he was a Department of Justice man, and asked me for the use of my books. Naturally, a man wants to know to whom he is throwing open his books, so I asked him if he had anything with which to identify himself—some letter from the department or the like. He said he hadn't, but that if I had any doubt of his authority I could write to Washington and find out. Two or three days later a wire informed me the man was a department representative, and I threw the books open to him. In fact, I had a private office prepared for him so he would have privacy.

"From the very first this representative showed anything but a friendly spirit. He seemed to be looking for trouble. I honestly can't recall just what it was that caused the little differences that arose, but he left and went back to Washington with his report.

"A little while later I heard from the Department that everything seemed to be all right and that whatever action it decided to take I would hear from in New York.

Mr. Wood swung half-around in his chair, looked out over Boston harbor and with a half-quizzical smile continued:

TOLD OF INDICTMENT.

"The next thing I knew, like a bolt out of a clear sky, came the news from New York that I and the American Woolen Company had been indicted for profiteering in woolen cloth. The Department had sent a bookkeeper to make me instead of a man who knew something about the woolen business.

"I employed Judge Charles Evans Hughes to defend us and how the government failed to establish its indictment you know.

"We had been perfectly open with the department. We asked for co-operation and showed every willingness to abide by anything the department gave us. We tried to play fair with the government, but found it had not played fair with us."

Mr. Wood did not add what he might have and what he knew as fact that the phrase "wearing apparel" as meaning clothing was inserted in the Lever act at the express direction of Attorney-General Palmer and that through this loosely-drawn phrase Mr. Palmer failed to secure the indictment he sought for the government.

And furthermore that the Department of Justice had been advised in a friendly manner by unquestionable legal authority that Judge Hughes did not apply in the case contemplated against the American Woolen Company and Mr. Wood.

EXPLAINS HIGHER PRICE.

Also what is now a matter of record, that the indictment was brought by the department in spite of advice against it, that Judge Hughes had the indictment quashed and that a second attempt to secure an indictment in New York was ruled out of court on the merits of the case.

"The department had found fourteen pieces of cloth from among the millions of yards we manufactured the year before," Mr. Wood continued. "They found similar pieces of the current run in our mills and found that we charged the same price for the fourteen pieces as we did for the current run.

"Here you are," it said, selling these fourteen pieces of cloth at a price higher than you sold them a year before. Your company is profiteering.'

"Had any business man been employed in the Department's investigation, he would have known that the goods made last cost more to produce than the same piece of goods the year before. Wages were higher, transportation charges had risen, the cost of raw materials and wool were more.

HIGHEST PAID EMPLOYES.

"How could any business man with pieces of similar cloth laid out before a buyer tell that buyer there were two sets of prices on the same cloth. Supposing the first piece of cloth sold the year it was made for $2 a yard and it was higher even supposing the same material the next year had—because of increased cost of production—to be sold for $3 a yard.

"Could we take those fourteen pieces of cloth made to sell at $2 and a dozen similar pieces made a year later to sell at $3 a yard and keep the price of one at $2, the other at $3. In other words, offer the same quality and design of goods at $2 and $3 at the same time to the buyers?

"Common sense would tell anybody no one can do business with two sets of prices and get away with it. So much for the profiteering charge.

"Now about the manufacturers' prices breaking or my closing the mills to break the labor market and cut down wages. I know they're saying those things in some quarters.

"Here's the answer: A prominent State official said to me after an investigation last Fall: 'Mr. Wood, do you know our investigations have shown you are paying the highest wages to your employes that are paid in any industry in the country? That your wages are the highest paid in the woolen industry in the world?'

"ALL PROPAGANDA."

"Does it stand to reason that a man who has always led in advancing his employes' wages, who today is paying the highest wages, who wants to see his employes make all the money they can—for the Lord knows they need it these days—does it stand to reason, I ask, that with such a record of forty years in the woolen business I have started at this late date to make what for forty years I have been building up?

"It's all propaganda," said Mr. Wood, "A man gets tired of being batted around and of having his company batted around whether by

Boy Is Twice Saved From Death

Eight-year-old Jesse Parker of No. 80 Pope street, East Boston, twice narrowly escaped death—first from being run over by a train and then by drowning—his rescuer in each case being Fireman William Tennet of the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn railroad.

The boy was crossing the trestle between Wood Island Park and Harbor View when the train approached. Tennet perceived that the youngster could not be stopped in time, and he climbed down to the cowcatcher in the face of time to pull Jesse off the tracks and into the water. Tennet then jumped into the water and brought the boy to shore.

Textile Workers Forced to Meet on Vacant Lot

Ben Legere, organizer, will have charge of the meeting and will be the principal speaker.

The Central Council meets tomorrow night, and will be addressed by W. J. Mosts, formerly a minister and a leader in the 1919 strike. It was reported that an important announcement would be made following this meeting.

Wednesday night the idle mill workers affiliated with the Amalgamated will discuss the possibility of securing an injunction to force the mills to reopen.

IDENTIFY TRUNK MURDER VICTIM

Woman Slain in Detroit Was Katherine Jackson of Mississippi

Eugene Leroy of New York were at the hotel that night, coming in at different times and occupying different rooms.

A. H. Ellenbourg registered with them as a wedding party and said "Mr. Leroy and I are married," according to Mrs. Trumbull. They went to their room in Trumbull at No. 235 Lysander street and it was there that Mrs. Trumbull wore the new sweater coat found in the trunk on a number of occasions and became familiar with other clothing, and first heard of A. A. Tatum.

FREQUENTLY QUARRELLED.

"Mrs. Leroy wrote Tatum for money, which she received, and again, following a quarrel with Leroy, sent for Tatum," Mrs. Trumbull said.

Mrs. Trumbull confided in me that she had been married and divorced from a negro lawyer named Jackson in Mississippi and had hoped this marriage would be happier. They quarrelled frequently, however, and when Tatum was here and went out with Mrs. Leroy I followed and saw one night by Leroy with a dagger."

Shortly after that incident the Trumbulls moved to Highland Park and the Leroys to No. 83 Trumbull avenue, where they lived with Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Pfister. The Pfisters were located by the homicide squad and took up the story where the Trumbulls left off, at the same time making a second identification of the clothing found in the trunk.

CLOTHING IDENTIFIED.

Mrs. Pfister said she had worn the brown coat with black fur collar several times. Pfister completed the last link in the chain of facts connecting the Leroys with the baffling murder when he admitted he had moved Leroy's trunk from his home at No. 83 Trumbull avenue early in June. When he paid him Leroy said: "Don't tell any one where you moved to-o," according to Pfister.

Leroy was employed at the Timken Axle Company, Cadillac and Hudson motor car plants while in Detroit, and Mrs. Leroy at the Western Union under the name of Jackson, according to both the Pfisters and Trumbulls.

After giving a complete description of Leroy which tallies with that given Detectives Lyons in New York by A. J. Brannle of "A. J. Fernandez," Trumbull said Leroy talked August 5 to a girl on the City Hospital suffering from the effects of the alleged beating. The trouble occurred when Nye tried to break up a gang of loiterers at the corner of Columbus Park and Mercer street.

Mrs. Trumbull and Mrs. Pfisters gave detailed descriptions of Leroy and Mrs. Leroy, corresponding with those given by Mrs. Lottie Brooks, landlady at No. 196 Harper avenue.

At the same time that Lieut. Frank Hale and Policeman Trumbull left for Chicago to identify the suspect, arrested there as Leroy, Lieut. Edward Mitte, of the homicide squad, and Assistant Prosecutor Robert T. Speed left for New York to secure all evidence held by New York police and to bring the body of the woman back to this city for identification by the Trumbulls, Pfisters and Mrs. Brooks.

SECOND TRUNK TRACED.

The Detroit police are also in communication with the police of Birmingham, Alabama, Jacksville, Miss. and Palatka, Fla.

Whether Tatum will be brought from Birmingham has not yet been decided. The homicide squad has traced the second trunk which was taken from the Harper avenue address as far as the Michigan Central depot, and advance the theory that it is now lying in storage at some Northern point and contains the vital organs and clothing and bloody bed clothing.

Detective Lieutenant William Black said today that the information given by the International News Service had materially aided in solving the mystery.

Police officials were first informed of Tatum's statement by the International News Service early Sunday night. Lieutenant Black said, and immediately wired Birmingham for details. Later details arrived splendid and quick work by the homicide squad had save the whole tragedy with the exception of the actual arrest of the slayer, and he is known. The International News Service is to be congratulated for aiding materially in clearing up the case."

New York Police Furnish Important Clews

New York, July 26.—With the identity of the trunk murder victim apparently established as that of "Katherine Jackson," a Southern girl, the New York authorities today were prepared to offer two clews towards identification of her slayer.

These consisted of a canceled check for $6.75, endorsed by "E. Leroy" in flowing characters, and a letter written in the same hand by "E. Leroy." Both were furnished by A. J. Brannle as expressman who stored a trunk for Leroy, or "A. J. Fernandez," as he was known to Brannle. The expressman believes Fernandes and Leroy to be the same man.

Brannie told the police that Fernandez, or Leroy, left a large wardrobe trunk with him one day when the body was found in his care last Summer. At that time Brannie knew him as Fernandez. Later, Brannie said, Fernandez went to Detroit. He wrote to Brannie asking him to send the trunk to The Detroit Y. M. C. A. to "E. Leroy," and enclosed a check for $25.00 to pay the charges.

Brannie sent the trunk and also his own check for $6.75 as the charges were only $18.22.

Amiens Maps Found in Spy's Gloves

Decatur, Ill., July 26.—H. von Boechman, Wabash roundhouse employe, found an old glove while watching firemen fight a blaze in the Wabash shops here. Attracted by the peculiar sewing, he ripped it apart and found two maps of the fortifications of Amiens, France.

The drawing was on tracing muslin and the maps were encased in oil cloth and sewed between two layers of leather. The maps are thought to be German war maps of the world war. Who the glove belonged to or how it happened to be where it was could not be learned.

CAPPER ATTACKS GOVERNOR COX

Declares Western Farmers Back Harding to Beat Bosses and Southern Selfishness

By Universal Service.

Marion, O., July 26.—Southern selfishness and Northern political boss-ship would control in the United States were the Democratic party to win this Fall, and Western farmers realize that the Republican ticket must be elected to prevent such a condition, declared Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, after a conference with Senator Harding.

In discussing political conditions with the newspaper representatives later Senator Capper said:

"The farmers, and generally the people of the West, in my heart, are fast realizing why it is necessary that the Republican ticket be elected. They have learned how the nomination of Cox was brought about. They know that Cox was put under the heaviest obligations to the Democratic bosses of New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Illinois.

"More recently we have seen the same thing in the case of sugar. I have made more complete demonstration of democracy's administrative incompetence than in the story of sugar this year. Just about a year ago the Cuba sugar crop was offered in this government at a price around six cents a pound. The Sugar Equalization Board, the Sugar Controller, everybody except President Wilson, strongly urged that it be bought. That would have insured ample supplies, and we would now be getting sugar at retail for 11 or 12 cents.

"The American voters of Greek descent are one hundred per cent. for Harding and Coolidge," declared Constantine C. Moustakis, of Salem, Mass. who called on Senator Harding with letters of introduction from Governor Coolidge and Senator Lodge.

Moustakis was accompanied by Captain W. J. MacIntyre, of Lowell, Mass., an honorary member of the "League of Friends of Greece."

The car was found abandoned on Russell Park, Quincy Centre.

Prices realized on Swift & Company sales of fancy 1920 corn-fed steers for week ending August 21st, on shipments sold out, ranged from $12.25 to $15.00 per 100 pounds and averaged 13.09 cents per pound.—Advt.

2,000,000 TONS OF U. S. COAL GOING OVERSEAS EVERY MONTH

STORROW CHARGES PROVED

Supply New England Needs Is Being Diverted to Satisfy Europe's Demands

While coal cannot be found in sufficient quantities for New England homes and factories, it is being shipped overseas from Baltimore and Hampton Roads at the record rate of 2,000,000 tons a month.

This charge, laughed at by official Washington when it was made by Fuel Administrator James J. Storrow, was proved beyond a shadow of a doubt today by the report of the Geological Survey.

During the month of June 2,174,799 tons of coal were shipped to European countries from the two tidewater ports which supply New England with water-borne fuel.

While that huge consignment was going overseas and while New England public men clamored for relief, this [illegible] tion got only 372,421 tons.

[illegible]as 600,000 tons short of New [illegible]'s needs, as voiced by Mr. [illegible] in a statement to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Dispatches from Washington today indicate that the Administration's knowledge of these facts was what enabled him to get the New England priority order for coal issued recently. Coal operators making millions selling to bidders for foreign countries and ignoring American needs are doing all in their power to lull New England to sleep in the hope of any movement toward an embargo on exports.

Shipments of bituminous coal to tidewater during June were the largest on record, according to the Geological Survey report. The total dumped at North Atlantic ports was 4,439,000 tons.

It is pointed out in the report that shipments to New England had not yet begun to be influenced by the priority order. This order was in effect only six working days in June.

Miss Conley and 'Chick' Dillon to Wed Soon

Miss Anna Conley, loyal to fiance through all his troubles, who declares he is determined to follow the straight path.

Miss Anna Conley of Pine street, Cambridge, and John F. (Chick) Dillon of Somerville, who was tried with Herman L. Barney for the murder of Patrolman Owen Sweeney and pronounced innocent by a jury and who is now out on bail on an indictment in Middlesex county, alleging complicity in the auto theft ring, are planning an early marriage.

Intimates said today that they are apt to slip away any day to be wed in a quiet ceremony. Former lieutenant-Governor Edward P. Barry, counsel for Dillon, expects the knot to be tied very soon. If Miss Conley had her way they would have been married in June. The date was fixed, but Barney's escape from State prison late in May upset their plans.

Dillon insisted that the wedding be postponed. He feared Barney's flight might involve him again and his arrest last week showed that he was right. He said he did not wish to burden his fiancee or her parents further with his trouble and shame and that he would not make Anna his wife until he had cleared away the last shred of suspicion.

This made a hit with Miss Conley. She admired Jack more than ever for his manly attitude and his interest in her welfare. Jack's regard for Anna increased also, if such a thing were possible, because she had earned his everlasting gratitude for her constancy. Following the first arrest and all through the trial that had set him free.

He says she was his chief inspiration and that he shunned his old companions and has been walking the "straight and narrow path" since his acquittal, as a reward for her devotion.

ED ELECTRIC CHAIR.

"I wanted to let her see that it was a mistake and that I could be as good and as industrious as any other upright fellow of her acquaintance," said Dillon today. "The thing that hurts me most was the thought that I was on trial for my life, facing the electric chair at the age of twenty-two. It was a pretty tough ordeal and don't care to go through anything like it again."

Miss Conley said today:

"I guess, being a woman, I must have had more strong faith in Jack and the courts. I supposed it was as much their function to help an erring person who was sincere to reform as it was to punish offenders. Take Jack's case. He foolishly fell in with evil companions and was arrested in connection with that shooting. Acquitted for killing a man—Jack, who wouldn't harm anybody!

REFUSED $50 PAY. TIES DILLON UP.

"The first I heard about it was when I read big headlines in a morning newspaper. I thought it was true. I scarcely knew what to do. At the first possible opportunity I hurried to Cambridge to see him. I visited him on every visiting day while he was in jail for conspiracy and attended the trial every session.

"I kept as far in the background as I could, although I had ignored the pleadings of relatives and friends to give him up. I thought he needed me more than ever, although the disgrace was almost too much to bear. People talked and nudged each other. I managed to keep out of the newspapers until his arrest this time, when the old complaints in Cambridge when I decided that if I could help him by letting the public know what a plucky fight he had made and how he had won. I would smother my own feelings about publicity.

"I want him to help the authorities all he can. I never doubted all through his trial that he would be cleared. He is straight, as I look back at it, how positive I was in my own mind about the outcome, and I feel that the State county authorities will be just and humane in dealing with Jack in these cases. I will take the responsibility. If they allow us to marry without further interference we will go where Jack can get a new start in life.

LIVING AT NANTASKET.

"After his acquittal he nearly died from a growth in his ear. He was in the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary for several months, and, after his recovery, went to Florida to win back his strength. He has been living at Nantasket since May. He is well and strong and eager to show that he can do it the authorities will only help him and me. I am not saying this in a sound mood in a newspaper. I mean every word of it. Jack always worked hard for a living and took pride in his pay. There was not a mark against him until he fell in with those men. Jack is easy-going and good-natured. All he asks is a chance."

Install 'Vamp-Proof' Guards at Beach

Chicago, July 26.—"Vamp-proof" life-savers appeared on the fifty-first street bathing beach today, to take the place of six others who lost their jobs when they succumbed to the wiles of Southern girls who are stopping at fashionable hotels in the vicinity and frequent that beach.

A girl of Nashville, Tenn., was one who expressed sympathy for the boys who lost their jobs.

"Of course the life guards should be good looking and be able to do their duty well," she said, "but, they should be able to entertain us when we are lonesome. Watch me talk to that new life guard."

She did, but the new "vamp-proof" guard only answered her questions.

"It's getting awful," said the guard as he walked away. "If they are not careful I will forget my official position and lose it, too."

HERE 44 YEARS, MUST QUIT U. S.

Fritz Tempelhof, "Man Without a Country," Ordered to Go to Argentina

Fritz Tempelhof, a resident of the United States for forty-four years, must go back to Argentina, according to a decision received at the United States immigration office here today from Director of Immigration Caminetti. The decision marked another chapter in the career of Tempelhof, for many years employed in Boston restaurants, who has become known as the man without a country among immigration officials and persons who have interested themselves in the case.

Tempelhof, who is fifty-eight years old, came to America from Germany in 1876. He was fourteen years old. He married here and five children, born of the marriage, are now living in New York city. One of his sons fought with the American army in France.

LOST HIS POSITION.

Early in 1914 Tempelhof shipped as a steward on a British ship for South America. He ship in Buenos Aires in August at the outbreak of the war and Tempelhof, being then a German subject, was dismissed from the crew.

He started to return to the United States, but was refused passport because he could not prove citizenship. The German consul declined to help him, claiming that he was not a subject of Germany because he had not fulfilled his military obligations before migrating.

For three years he was a derelict in the pampas grass country of Argentina.

REACHES ENGLAND.

In 1917 he managed to enter as a stowaway on a ship which he thought was bound for Boston, but was in reality calling for England. When opposite the Irish coast and a day out of Liverpool the ship was torpedoed. Many of the crew were drowned, but the others, including Tempelhof, were picked up by a Portuguese freighter bound for Argentina and in a few weeks Tempelhof was back in Argentina.

Several weeks ago he again became a stowaway, this time on the freighter West Galets and landed in Boston. He was detained by the immigration inspectors and his case reported to Washington.

Rev. Walter A. Maier of No. 70 Tuffill street, Dorchester, who has become interested in Tempelhof's predicament, said today that he would appeal to the American Legion and the pressure upon the State Department to allow Tempel hof to join his family in the United States because of his son's service for the country.

LAWRENCE PAIR'S $140 MYSTERIOUSLY TAKEN

Lawrence, July 26.—The local police have been asked to solve a mystery. Twice within the last few days Frank Demosthenes and his wife of Jackson street has hidden money, with his wife the only person sharing the secret, and each time $70 has disappeared. To date he has, he says, lost $140 dollars. Both times he left the money in a bureau drawer. The matter was investigated but without result.

Mrs. Demos tried to get a new hiding place. This time he placed sixty dollars under the mattress of his bed and four and then placed the bureau over the spot where the money was. Again the "secret hand" robbed the "family bank." This second helping was too much for him to keep secret. Consequently he and his wife decided to confide in the police and asked their assistance.

HOPE FOR PEACE WITH SOVIETS

Premiers George and Millerand to Confer on Plans for a General Parley

By International News Service.

London, July 26.—Premier Lloyd George will leave tomorrow to confer with Premier Millerand at Boulogne on plans for a general peace with Soviet Russia and the Russian border states.

It is expected that Poland, Finland, Lithuania and possibly Rumania will be represented if a general peace conference is held.

Foch Working on Plan to Back Up Poland

Paris, July 26.—Ignoring Soviet Russia's action in granting a preliminary truce to Poland, Marshal Foch and his staff are working feverishly toward the completion of plans to back up Poland to the limit.

French and British appear to be resolved not to allow Poland to make peace with the Soviets on any terms not satisfying to Allied policy.

Some dispatches ascribe this attitude of the leading allied powers to a cabled report from Washington that the United States is inclined to grant credits to Poland to enable her to purchase the immense ammunition stores left behind by the German Imperial Army in various parts of Europe, and also to furnish Poland with whatever else she may need from America.

Whether Washington will officially confirm reports of its willingness to support Poland against Russia, however, doubted by highly placed observers here.

As to President Wilson, they argue that the quick reaction of Soviet Russia to Poland's demand for an armistice has placed him in the most awkward position of his career.

SEE DEATH BLOW TO LEAGUE.

Incidentally, Tchitcherin's statement that the Soviets are willing to grant Poland better terms than have been suggested by the Allies, and his prompt action in stopping the victorious advance of the Bolshevist army, thus refraining from exploiting an easy advantage and dictating terms in a beaten enemy's capital, are regarded here as evidence of the death blow to the League of Nations idea.

France, it is expected will soon be forced by the turn of events to abandon her obdurate anti-Soviet policy in favor of an adequate compromise on the question of repayment of the Czar's debts.

Soviet Russia's liberal attitude toward Germany, who had attacked the Bolshevist for clearly imperialistic purposes, is indeed regarded as a lesson to Europe's self-styled statesmen.

It seems clear to all "insiders" that nothing is left to the Allied governments to do except to accept the Soviets, which have proved to be in full control of a powerful army and whose methods have "outcivilized" the old European civilization.

NEW WAR POSSIBLE.

It is believed impossible and preposterous that France's claim that the Soviets must fully recognize the Czar's debts and repudiate the new 2,000,000,000 francs (normally $8,100,000,000) before France will consent to negotiate with them, should be allowed to stand in the way toward a final settlement of world peace.

Should, however, the Moscow Soviets under the influence of Lenin, the land of a Soviet government, then war clouds will gather over this hemisphere darker and more threatening than of nearly six years ago, for then Allied unity encouraged by President Wilson's antipathetic attitude and relying on America's help, are resolved to prevent Poland from accepting such a governmental system.

To prevent that they are resolved to back Poland to the limit, and if the Soviets insist on Sovietizing Poland a conflict is inevitable in which the East will be pitted against the West for the control of the world.

Once Wealthy Doctor Dies a Dish Washer

By International News Service.

New York, July 26.—The body of Dr. Harry E. Campbell, once a wealthy Pittsburgh physician and lately a dish washer in a New York restaurant, who died suddenly in a New York lodging house, was held here today awaiting instructions from relatives.

An examination showed death was due to hemorrhage of the brain. Papers in Dr. Campbell's trunk showed he was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College and that at one time he was on the staff of the Pittsburgh General Hospital.

Other papers showed that Dr. Campbell's wife and daughter had gone to Europe just before the war and that another daughter, who is now in this country, is a concert singer of considerable note.

A letter which the doctor evidently had written just before death was addressed to Miss Lola Finley of Kittaning, Pa., a friend of the family. Dr. Campbell was sixty-five years old.

PETTIBONE NEAR COLLAPSE

Strain of Trial for Life Brings Accused Poisoner to Verge of Breakdown

Manchester, N. H., July 26.—Byron Madison Pettibone, alleged wife-poisoner, worn by the strain of his trial for life, is on the verge of a nervous breakdown. His condition has reached such a serious stage that a doctor has been called to treat the defendant in his cell in the town lockup.

Officials believe the court recital of Miss Eva Sullivan, a nurse, today with the accused prior to and following the death of his wife, coupled with the reading of an alleged confession by Pettibone, in which he described giving his wife the fatal dose of strychnine, are believed to have caused the breakdown.

Pettibone, despite the painfulness of his attack, recovered sufficiently to appear in court today under, however admissions of his alleged guilt were to be read.

The introduction of this alleged confession, in which he corroborated in all essential details the admission he made to the state police, will be the big fight will be read during the testimony of Frank E. Woodbury, the attorney's stenographer who took shorthand notes of Pettibone's confession of guilt.

Following the reading of the alleged confession the government rests and the case for the defence will be opened by Attorney Henry Chase. Fifty witnesses, it is expected, will be called in an endeavor to prove the accused insane, and testify to his previous good character and reputation.

BUSES REPLACE TROLLEY CARS

Connecticut Company Stops Its Service But Bridgeport Doesn't Mind

By International News Service.

Bridgeport, Ct., July 26.—Despite the shutting down at midnight of the trolley service of the Connecticut company in accordance with the notice to the city a week ago, the traffic rush was handled without confusion here today.

Captain John O'Connell, in charge of a detail of police on hand to handle the traffic situation, stated that the increased number of jitneys took care of the situation without confusion. At no part of the city was any delay reported by the riding public.

A canvass of the larger factories showed that no employes were late at work.

Captain James Walker said that the absence of trolleys had relieved the congestion in the centre and that traffic was moving more rapidly and freely without the trolleys.

John B. Scwartz, president of the Bridgeport Bus Association, said there would be the additional buses for the rush tonight. Mayor William H. Wilson's committee named to attempt to secure a settlement of the jitney driver differences met today and will try to secure a conference with the Connecticut company officials.

Belfast, July 26.—A man and a woman died from bullet wounds in the hospital here, making the death list seventeen.

Catholic churches here and throughout County Antrim were protected today by machine guns and barbed wire. There was renewed rioting, looting and incendiarism however.

David Dunbar, a taxicab driver, was shot dead by a sentry when he disobeyed an order to halt.

The rioting is spreading all over Ulster. Particularly fierce fighting took place in Lisburn.

At Ranger (in the northeast corner of County Down), the hospital for consumptives, established by Joseph Devlin, the Irish Nationalist leader, was shot down by a mob which also wrecked a number of homes of Nationalists.

Rioting took place at Newtownards and Ballynahinch (both in Down). At Newtownards a Sinn Feiner was so violent that the military was called out to quell him.

Talented volunteers have been summoned to appear at their respective drill halls on Wednesday. Sinn Feiners will not answer, now arises whether it will act similarly against Ulster men.

BLAMES LACK OF GUARDS FOR KEOWN'S ESCAPE

District Attorney F. Howard Ironsell of Essex county announced today that he would not call on the grand jury to investigate the escape of Dr. James A. Keown, former Lynn physician, who broke his confinement in the Danvers Insane Hospital, Saturday, for the second time, and is still at large. The district attorney said that he was convinced the prisoner's successful flight was due entirely to an insufficient number of guards at the institution.

GOMPERS CALLS LABOR TO ARMS

"Hessians of Greed and Plunder" Must Be Beaten at Polls, Says Union Leader

Washington, July 26.—Under the caption "Toilers Sanctify Your Vote," Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in the leading editorial of the August issue of the American Federationist, calls upon workingmen and women everywhere to unite in defeating candidates for Congress who have shown themselves hostile to labor.

The chief of the American Federation of Labor declares it is necessary for labor to show a united front against its enemies and in support of its friends because "the forces of greed and plunder, the profiteers and autocrats of our political and industrial life leave no doubt as to what they desire and where they will mass their support."

The enemies of labor have given to their servants the mandate that labor must be crushed," declares Gompers, "it's right denied and its liberties destroyed.

"The most virile movement in political life today is the national nonpartisan campaign of the American Federation of Labor. There is no mistaking the influence that is being exerted for the defeat of candidates who have shown themselves antagonistic to the best interests of the workers.

UNFRIENDLY DEFEATED.

"The records show that in the primary elections which have been held thus far, the friends of labor, through a directive part in more than fifteen contests. In many districts those who have been hostile or unfriendly have been defeated.

"The issues of the campaign are now before the people everywhere, the records of the candidates for the House of Representatives and Senate have been set forth in all labor organizations. The political party platforms have been written and labor's analysis of them has been placed before the people. There is no ambiguity about the records of either candidates or parties.

"Politicians who fear retribution at the hands of an outraged electorate charge that labor had abandoned its non-partisanship and became partisan. That is not true. It is false. There is no labor vote to be delivered and no labor partisanship to be betrayed.

TO RETIRE "BETRAYERS."

"There is however, a vote of workingmen and women who, as a class, are generally who are forward looking and who are determined to guard the gains they have made and who will vote more unitedly than ever for the retirement of those who have betrayed their trust in them and for the election of those whom they have learned to know and that they may be trusted to uphold the rights of the people.

"The philosophy that has been manifested in labor's non-partisan campaign surrounds every voter known as an American political effort. In response to suggestions from the national committee, state and local unions, central bodies and State federations throughout the country have established campaign committees and these in turn have formed compact organizations in which the efforts of all might be co-ordinated for the purpose of securing the fullest possible results.

"The challenge of the forces of greed, privilege and plunder to labor of the Nation is brazen and blunt. That the right-thinking men and women of the republic can afford to allow this challenge to reap a harvest of political power at the coming election is unthinkable. More than in any political campaign since the civil War the issue is clearly drawn between reaction and progress, the wish of the enemies of labor to go back and the will to go forward.

SHALL LIBERTY LIVE?

"In wanton denial of this nobility of thought and concept the Hessians of greed and plunder seek to ride down the spirit of labor and to destroy their liberties. The enemies of labor have given to their servants the mandate that labor must be crushed, its rights destroyed and its liberties destroyed.

"The free expression of the working people, the whole destiny of democracy is underlined in election day. All is involved and entwined. If labor could be turned back from it onward path, the whole world of liberty would cease to burn for the millions.

"The one supreme issue is whether liberty shall live or die. Free political of free speech and free press, the despotic use of the injunction—all of these are manifestations of the same determination, the same drive to crowd labor back from the road of progress.

"The dim eyes of the helpless are upon the hosts of labor in this great struggle. May the manhood and womanhood of America vindicate now the hopes and trusts of which our great nation has its birth."

POLICE ACCUSED OF HOLDING STOLEN AUTOS FOR "TIPS"

ton insurance companies links up the names of police representatives of Cambridge, Revere, Lynn, Brookline and Lawrence with the police rake-off on stolen automobiles.

Some of this evidence is in writing. Some of it from police threats the companies to whom it is addressed with shutting their eyes to the recovery of their stolen cars in the future, unless something is paid them for the recovery of automobiles.

These threats are made in spite of the fact that, in a majority, a large majority of instances the cars are recovered without material effort on the part of the police demanding the rewards and without the apprehension of the thieves who stole the cars.

STRANGE STORIES TOLD.

Strange stories are being told in insurance offices of the attitude of some of the police relative to stolen cars. It is openly stated that when all the facts are known, the inaction of some policemen will be actually convicting them of being in thief bands in a manner which will drop a sensation unapproached, even by the scandals of Bunker Hill and those with whom he operated.

Some of the attempts to get rewards for stolen cars amount almost to a hold-up, insurance underwriters declare.

A large amount of this evidence is said to be in possession of the Underwriters' Detective Bureau, which settles the claims of the 114 companies which contribute to its activities.

REFUSE TO GIVE NAMES.

Joseph P. Truman is the man in charge of the Boston branch of this bureau. While the insurance companies state they wish the fullest publicity given the most intimate features of automobile stealing, the bureau and Truman refuses to make any comment or make public the information which the companies themselves declare the bureau has obtained.

The facts concerning the widespread theft of cars, and the many channels through which they go, and the police apparent reluctance to enter with spirit in the apprehension of motor thieves, is slowly coming to light.

When these are published a scandal which will open up sensations in several police departments, particularly in Cambridge, is declared will result.

The hints of questionable police practices in the University City are becoming more and more pronounced.

Substantial evidence, it is said, is soon expected which will serve to open the mystery surrounding the recovery of many stolen cars in Cambridge.

BOLD CLAMOR FOR REWARDS.

"In their clamor for rewards, it is said, the police in some Greater Boston municipalities have become very bold.

"Insurance men have long waited excuse to question police as to why certain cars were kept in certain garages after they were recovered before they were surrendered.

"They are asking why at least one of these cars was found by a man in the name of a policeman, and its subsequent discovery there.

"At the same time an investigation is still underway to locate the man responsible for the theft of the automobile which was later sold in New York by a Revere policeman.

"That the insurance companies are to a considerable extent to blame for the practice of fleecing policemen, was admitted by an adjuster for a Boylston street insurance concern today. This man readily said that he pays for services rendered him by the police in cash. He said that on several occasions he had given policemen $10 for their day's work in recovering cars with him for his company.

BETTER SERVICE BY "TIP."

"While this is in direct violation of many police ordinances, the adjuster stated that he found he got more efficient service, and was better thought of by the police for giving them a "tip," as he called it, than if he gave them a $10 bill at the close of the day's service.

"While this method of fleecing police gets around the ruling of the automobile conference which was drafted by the Underwriters' Detective Bureau as the last word in the matter, all rewards should be paid police for motorcycle work in the recovery of stolen cars, it is said to work a hardship on companies abiding by the ruling.

"In fact the enormous amounts levied upon the companies for rewards was one of the reasons, it is said, for the formation of the Underwriters' Detective Bureau.

"Under the agreement of the companies, members of the conference, the bureau is supposed to investigate all cases of the recovery of stolen cars. The bureau agents, it is said, are under instruction to report the conditions surrounding the recovery, and venture an opinion as to whether or not the reward is proper and deserving.

PAYMENT OF REWARDS.

"Upon these reports, and the reports of the adjusters and agents of the insuring company, the head of the Bureau and Theft Committee decides whether a reward shall be paid and the amount.

"If the answer is in the affirmative, a draft is sent from the central office to the branch office handling the case, and the money paid the police commissioner, in the name of the officer deserving the reward.

"Where convictions of thieves are obtained in connection with the recovery of cars, the companies are willing to advance substantial sums. This program is followed as a means of preventing the wholesale paying of rewards where the police, by recovering the cars do nothing toward such recovery other than their regular duty, and without the apprehension of the thief.

WINK AT PRACTICE.

"Adjusters offering private fees to police, inhibit the program of the paid through the bureau," replied the manager.

"I don't want to have dealings with conference, insurance heads declare, but in spite of this fact, in the rivalry for the recovery of cars, several companies are said to wink at the practice.

"Not two weeks ago, a man in charge of the losses of one of the major companies writing automobile insurance in Boston, was called on the 'phone by a man who stated he was a prominent police official.

"I am ——," said this officer, "I am prosecuting a policeman in Chelsea. Is there any reward on the car found in a garage?

"If there is any reward it will be the bureau. They never pay a cent," replied the officer.

"Well, that is all I can do about it," stated the manager, and hung up his receiver.

This statement was made today by the manager of the loss department of the firm.

Victorious Red Army Is 3,000,000 Strong

Paris, July 26.—The Russian army which halted its whirlwind advance, within easy reach of a tremendous triumph, is 3,000,000 strong, according to the latest reliable news received here. It is described as perfectly disciplined, fully equipped, and well fed and supplied. Against this huge army the Poles had some 600,000 dispirited, badly-supplied troops.

Signor Serrati, noted Italian journalist, just back from a visit to Russia, says in the newspaper Avanti that the Bolshevist army is the best organized war machine the world has ever seen.

Michael Touckachewaki, the Soviet Generalissimo, is idolized throughout Russia as the "Red Napoleon" and is spoken of by military experts as the greatest military genius of a century.

He is only twenty-seven years old, belongs to an old Russian family, and became famous during the Czar's regime when he was promoted to the rank of general in the field because of his astonishing deeds of valor.

Just before the pre-armistice truce was arranged, he said he would enter Warsaw on August 1. He added he would "settle" General Wrangel's anti-Bolshevist army in the Crimea immediately afterwards. His words carry great weight with his countrymen as he has never been known to make an idle boast. Months ago he predicted he would annihilate Denikine, then Kolchak, then defeat Poland and finally destroy Wrangel's army.

ROOSEVELT ACTS AS BOAT PILOT

Brings Destroyer to Anchorage Near His Summer Home in Maine

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic nominee for Vice-President, piloted the torpedo boat destroyer U. S. S. Hatfield to his Summer home on Campobello Island, near Eastport, Me., from the Charlestown navy yard where he visited after his arrival in this city.

When the Hatfield dropped anchor off Campello Island he was greeted by his mother, Mrs. Sara D. Roosevelt, members of the Roosevelt family, Summer vacationists and Dominion residents.

Three Republicans and three Democrats called at the Roosevelt Summer home and with the vice-presidential nominee made preparations for the public reception in his honor to be held this week.

Mr. Roosevelt will remain with his family until Friday, when he will leave for Portland, arriving in Washington a week from today.

Mr. Roosevelt brought good news to Jim Charleston, Navy Yard employes, many of them war veterans, who have been classified as laborers, and who have been receiving 44 cents an hour. Their classification on being transferred from the supply division to the hull division, as an alternative to discharge, by president of dismissal altogether. They had previously been rated as "general helpers."

Mr. Roosevelt said an effort was being made to induce the civil service commission to reverse its ruling that they must be classified as "laborers" and paid as such.

PICK BUILDERS OF HOLY LAND

Franco-British Triumvirate to Include Rothschild, Reading and Mond

London, July 26.—The development of Palestine will be placed in the hands of a Franco-British triumvirate consisting of Lord Reading, Alfred Mond, British Minister of Public Works, and James Rothschild, son of Baron Edmond Rothschild, formerly the head of the great French banking family.

These three men, who will be the builders of the Jewish homeland, are expected to form an economic council for the world wide Zionist organization and will be responsible for financing the project and completing the proposed great public works in Palestine.

PERSONNEL ASSURED.

The personnel of the "triumvirate," while not yet officially announced, is practically assured, according to information reaching Universal Service from the highest Zionist sources following adjournment of the Zionist world convention here.

Mond, who is one of the most prominent Jews in Britain, as already accepted the trusteeship, and commemorated his appointment by a donation of $125,000 to the national Palestine fund. He has been selected to direct the engineering problem of the irrigation, waterworks and the development of the harbors, railroads and mineral resources as well as irrigation and the land requisitioning and the damming of the River Jordan, in order to establish a gigantic hydrostatic plant to overcome the lack of coal in the Holy Land.

Baron Reading has not yet signified his acceptance, but it is understood Justice Louis Brandeis is exerting his influence to induce him to do so. Reading is not a Zionist, but is extremely sympathetic toward the movement. He is reluctant to accept the honor because of his work and position as British Lord Chief Justice. Brandeis, however, in answer to this objection, refers to his own place on the Supreme bench in the United States, which did not prevent him from accepting the honorary presidency of the Zionist organization.

DEPEND ON AMERICAN CASH.

Rothschild is chosen because of the immense possibilities of his financial connections. He is a major in the British Jewish legion that fought with Allenby's army in Palestine. He is the Rothschild Hospital in Jerusalem to the American Jewish Medical Unit there.

While French and British brains will direct the working out of the Zionist project, American money is depended upon to finance the greater part of it. It is therefore certain that American approval will be necessary for all principal expenditures. Bernard Flexner of New York is the only American to get a place on the Zionist board of trustees with Louis Marshall and Judge Mack.

Mrs. Peter Schweitzer of New York has announced a $50,000 donation to-ward the $125,000,000 total, at the same time a group of Russian Jews headed by Doris Goldberg announced an aggregate donation of $500,000.

Women Advised How to Register to Vote

Mrs. True Worthy White, of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters, is writing for the Boston American a series of articles telling how to become registered for full suffrage in the Fall.

Because it seems quite probable that a thirty-sixth State will ratify the amendment, and because women, through inexperience, may be denied presidential suffrage, by neglecting to register or through the failing to understand the various steps leading to registration, Mrs. White will explain all the details. The seventh article follows:

By MRS. TRUE WORTHY WHITE†

Next, in our survey of the procedure of registration, we come to the voting list. What is a voting list? This is a list of the names and addresses of all legal voters. It must be prepared, and posted in the registration places and in one or more public places, at least 20 days before the annual or city elections and 40 days before the annual State election. Be sure that your name is on the voting list. This stems civic pride. As Abraham Lincoln said:

"I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. I like to see a man live in it, so that his place will be proud of him."

RUSSIA HAS FOOD FOR EXPORT

Grain, Meat, Butter, Eggs and Tea Plentiful—Transport Facilities Only Drawback

Moscow, via Archangel, July 26—In view of the critical food situation throughout Europe, the National Food Controller was asked the extent of Russia's ability to furnish relief.

"After supplying everybody in the country," he answered, "Soviet Russia can export between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 tons of wheat and other grain, 2,500,000,000 eggs, 40,000 tons of butter and tea, and 240,000 tons of meat immediately transport is available. There are in addition, great quantities of foodstuffs stored in the Ukraine and Siberia, but it is impossible to give accurate statistics on account of the war conditions which have prevailed until recently. These figures are the absolute minimum which Russia will be able to export now every succeeding year after thoroughly satisfying the needs of the entire Russian population, which is our first concern.

"Before the war Russia exported 12,000,000 tons of breadstuffs, but that was the result of the peasants selling their crops in order to pay extortionate taxes, thereby reducing themselves to a state of practical starvation.

MOSQUITOES DRIVEN AWAY FROM SPY POND

A preparation was deposited in Spy Pond, Arlington, some time ago, to kill the eggs and fungus which came to the surface of the water each season and make great breeding places for the pesky insects. Senator Harding's attention was called to this fact by Constantino C. Moutakis of Salem, Mass., who visited the Republican nominee in behalf of the League of the Friends of Greece.

WOMEN RIOTERS BURN GUARDS

Negresses in Bedford, N. Y., Reformatory Renew Race War—12 Soldiers Hurt

New York, July 26.—Twenty-seven negro women, inmates of the State Reformatory for Women at Bedford, set fire to shed their way out of a ... in which they were confined, and in a pitched battle with ten State troopers set as a guard over them, injured several of the men. The women used darirons, cleavers, knives, clubs and rocks as weapons.

It was only after a two-hour search through surrounding woods that all the negresses had been rounded up recaptured and placed under a heavy guard in the guard house.

None of the State troopers against whom the assault was launched escaped some sort of injury. Many of them were burned with the hot flatirons, or struck on the head with clubs and bricks as they attempted to restrain the women.

Trouble at the reformatory started Saturday when two white inmates were ordered to work in the laundry, where all other workers were negroes. The two refused to work with the negroes, and a race war followed.

HEAVY LOSS ON GERMAN OPERA

Increased Salaries of Singers Eat Up Profits of Many Theatre Ventures

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND,
Boston American Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, July 26.—With more operas than any other country in the world, and with more theatres than any other country of its size, Germany's theatrical and operatic world is confronted with a financial crisis that threatens to close many playhouses and operas.

As in almost every public or quasi-public institution in Germany, the deficit in the box offices, despite unprecedented attendance and prices, has cumulatively reached staggering proportions since the revolution of November, 1918.

To no small part this is due to the unjustified increases in salaries of the organized personnel.

Removes Wrinkles and Refreshes Tired Faces

As the skin tends to extend in warm weather, causing wrinkles to form, a good astringent tonic lotion should be used these days. Dissolve an ounce of pure powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. Bathe your face with it and see how quickly the wrinkles and furrows will disappear—and how much younger you will look! There's nothing better for sagging cheeks or double chin, or for enlarged pores.

Use this simple lotion during the heat of the day and you will find it wonderfully refreshing. You will look and feel fresh and cool. The ingredients of course are perfectly harmless. Be sure to ask the druggist for powdered saxolite—advertisement.

WAR OR LIBERTY, SAYS VALERA

Declares British Use Unionists as Tools to Keep Country in Subjugation

Washington, July 26.—Archbishop Daniel Mannix of Australia was the guest of honor at a reception at Gonzaga Hall given by the Friends of Irish Freedom.

The meeting was attended by hundreds of Irish enthusiasts, who cheered the prelate and Eamon De Valera, President of the Irish Republic, who was the principal speaker. The archbishop made a brief address of acceptance, expressing appreciation for the welcome that has been afforded him in Washington.

Referring to a dispatch from London saying that the British were ready to treat with Sinn Fein on all points in dispute except that of withdrawing troops from Ireland, President De Valera declared that peace between England and Ireland would come only with the last British soldier had been withdrawn from Ireland and her independence recognized.

DO NOT WANT PEACE.

"If peace were signed on these terms I would grieve for myself in fostering the same good relations between Ireland and Britain that exist between Ireland and the rest of the world," he said.

"The truth is the British government does not want peace in Ireland or with Ireland except on terms no real Irishman will accept, the basis of which is Ireland's subjugation as a mere province of Britain.

"The Irish people have proclaimed their independence, have established a republic, and mean to maintain it.

"Let Lloyd George appoint his plenipotentiaries; the government of the Republic of Ireland is ready to appoint its representatives.

"Already the republican government of Ireland has beaten the British government in three-fourths of Ireland. Lloyd George admits it, and Sir Edward Carson admits it.

UNIONISTS AS CATSPAW.

"The nations that refuse recognition for the government of Ireland are not only disregarding the principle of self-determination, but are in effect inviting Britain to use every means to recover control of Ireland.

"Irish Unionists are again being used as a catspaw, and the British capitalists are enjoying the joke when they see Catholic and Protestant, Unionist and Republican workmen at each other's throats.

"Lloyd George and Carson and the rest of them fear the coming together of Catholic and Protestant on the basis of Irish unity for the common country, and because they fear it they hope to defeat it by inciting Orangemen against us, knowing that the Republic would save Ireland by the increase of liberty it having been struck on the right check it would turn the left."

FREIGHT WORKERS WANT WAGE FIGHT CONTINUED

While a majority of the dockers and freight handlers employed at the local terminals of the Boston & Maine and Boston & Albany railroads are in favor of accepting the increase of 12 cents an hour granted them by the Chicago award of the railroad wage board, notice was served on the officers of the unions, to continue the fight for the additional five-cents-an-hour that was granted the men by a decision of board of adjustment No. 3, on May 15, 1918. This decision was rescinded later by then Director-General of Railroads Hines. The new award will increase the wage rate of these men from 43 to 55 cents an hour.

FEAR FOR SAFETY OF MISSING EVERETT GIRL

Relatives of sixteen-year-old Carrie Freeman of No. 18 Linden street, Everett, fear some evil has befallen her since she mysteriously disappeared last Saturday afternoon.

Miss Freeman, who was employed on Federal street, Boston, left the office at one o'clock Saturday, saying that she was going to meet an aunt in Everett. She did not keep her appointment with the aunt, Miss Martha Dawson, with whom she lives, nor did she return home last night. Attempts to locate her at the homes of friends in different suburbs were fruitless.

SOUTH BOSTON OFFICER SHOT DURING MELEE

Patrolman William L. Nye of the City Point police station was shot in the hand at Mercer street and Columbia road with his own gun, which he drew from his hip pocket in the course of a dispute with a crowd of young men whom, the police claim, refused to move along when ordered by the policeman. The police report the men were disturbing the peace and pounced on Nye when he took one of their number by the shoulder. Nye was badly pummeled about the face and his head cut during the melee. His attackers escaped.

$5,000 BAIL FOR VANZETTI IS REFUSED IN PLYMOUTH

Plymouth, July 26.— Plymouth County officials refused to admit Bartholomew Vanzetti to bail pending his sentence for assault with intent to murder Alfred R. Cox, Benjamin Bowles and Earl C. Graves on December 24. Several Boston lawyers appeared at the jail with $5,000, the bail set by the court, but objection raised by District Attorney Katzman resulted in Vanzetti being held. He will be sentenced August 18.

PLAN SWIMMING POOL FOR 500 HARVARD WOMEN

22 TELEPHONE UNIONS SECEDE

Vote to Quit A. F. of L. and Affiliate With Independent Brotherhood

Twenty-two of the twenty-five unions of the men employed by the New England and Providence Telephone and Telegraph companies have voted to withdraw from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the A. F. of L., and affiliate with the recently formed International Brotherhood of Telephone Workers, an independent organization outside of the recognized labor movement, it was announced at a meeting of the New England Joint Council of Telephone Workers at the American House.

In Boston trouble is anticipated when an attempt is made to take present charters from the walls of the meeting places and headquarters. Court action is looked for over the finances of the various organizations. The I. B. of E. W., under its constitution and by-laws, claims jurisdiction over the funds of its various subordinate unions whose secretaries are bonded, although the money is said to be paid in by the members of the locals and is usually deposited in local banks.

The real fight is looked for when leaders of the I. B. of E. W. attempt to obtain co-operation of the other labor unions in this section with the A. F. of L. in refusal to work with the members of the newly formed organization, which will be outside the recognized parent body.

A reception followed at the home of his mother, No. 5 Myrtle street, Charlestown.

Manchester, N. H., July 26.—Frank Fortuna was arrested at his home in Auburn, N. H., just over the Manchester line, after Department of Justice and police officials had unearthed an illicit still in a cleverly hidden windowless cellar under his home.

In the cellar, which was reached by a ladder leading from a trap door hidden under the shelves in a pantry, the officers found a double worm copper still, seven gallons of moonshine and a quantity of mash. Fortuna was at liberty under bail, having been arrested last May, charged with illegal possession of liquor, the officers being unable to locate a still at that time.

COX TO TREAT ON NATION'S ILLS

Friends Say He Will Make Sweeping Reply to Harding in Acceptance Speech

Washington, July 26.—Republican and Democratic leaders at the capital are looking forward with keen expectancy to what Governor Cox will say in his speech of acceptance of the Democratic nomination.

President Wilson is understood to be awaiting the speech with considerable interest, particularly as he is anxious about the attitude which Governor Cox may take on the League of Nations issue.

The supporters of Cox here fully believe that the Governor in his speech will make a complete answer to the arguments made by Senator Harding in his speech in which he declared for immediate peace by a resolution of Congress and for scrapping" of the league covenant.

Retiring national chairman Cummings, Judge Ansberry and Franklin Roosevelt, who share the confidence of Governor Cox are certain that the acceptance speech will fairly riddle Senator Harding's speech, and give the Republican nominee something further to think about.

The word has gone out from some of the Governor's closest supporters that he does not intend by any means to devote himself chiefly to the League of Nations issue. It is believed he will undertake to point out to the country that there are other problems just as important as the treaty question which are pressing for solution by the next administration. The high cost of living, profiteering, labor, help for the farmer and other matters, it is said, will be given fully as much attention in the speech as will the question of acting on the treaty.

PLANS COMPLETE FOR COOLIDGE

City Leaders Greet Members of National Notification Committee; Governor Returns

Northampton, July 26.—Members of the national committee of notification who are to take part in the exercises tomorrow incident to Governor Coolidge's acceptance speech, arrived here today and were welcomed by a body of the city's business and civic leaders.

Nearly all plans have been completed and nothing has been omitted to assure the success of the notification exercises. The entire town has been decorated from one end to the other, with banners and photographs of the State's chief executive observable on all sides. The predominating colors are, of course, red, white and blue and all who are expected to attend have been asked to carry an American flag.

J. R. Reynolds, official representative of the Governor, has arrived, with Mrs. Reynolds, from Washington and is attending to the details preparatory to the exercises. Mrs. Coolidge and the two boys have returned to their home and were followed later by the Governor.

Both the Coolidge home committee and the national committee of notification have taken quarters at the Draper Hotel and the arrangements are directed from there.

LOOK FOR EARLY APPLES SOON IN BOSTON MARKET

Early Massachusetts apples should be in the Boston markets in a few days, and they should be fairly plentiful if early crop indications mean anything, according to officials of the Massachusetts department of agriculture. Some of the "yellow transparent" variety have already made their appearance, they say, and other early varieties should be here soon after the first of August.

FEW "DRUNK" ARRESTS OVER THE WEEK-END

St. John's, N. F., July 26.—Wireless telephonic communication between a temporary station here and the steamer Victorian, 650 miles away and enveloped in a dense fog, was successfully inaugurated when a phonograph aboard ship, playing "Beautiful Ohio," was easily heard through the receiver here.

Premier Squires and Sir Patrick McGrath held lengthy conversations with Lord Burnham and were amply satisfied that success had been achieved.

The ship will be in communication with the shore station until it arrives at Sydney tomorrow evening.

Two men and two women were rescued from drowning in the Charles River at Riverside by Metropolitan Park police officers after they had been thrown into the water when their canoes capsized.

While a crowd of several hundred men and women stood helpless to aid behind a high wire fence at Norumbega Park, a young man and young woman fought for their lives until pulled into a rowboat by Patrolman John Austin of the park police. They were nearly exhausted before aid arrived.

Previously Sergeant William H. Chaisson saved the lives of a man and a woman whom he found clinging to the bottom of an overturned canoe near the Narrows. They were given first aid at the police station and then sent to their homes.

Advertise Advantages of Boston as Port

State Board Urges Business Interests to Unite in Securing Bulk Cargo from West—List of Sailings Now Being Sent to Shippers

By William L. Fairbanks

Director, Massachusetts Commission on Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

It is essential, if the shipping business of Boston is to grow, that the most aggressive solicitation be undertaken to secure for shipment through this port the bulk and general freight originating in the Middle West and West. The shipping business of Boston, while increasing, is not greater than it is today, not because of the existence of certain unfavorable transportation conditions, but because Boston has fallen far behind the other important Atlantic ports in advertising herself in the great freight producing sections of the West and in her attempts to procure this freight.

The sudden rejuvenation of America's merchant marine took Boston by surprise. No big, general plans had been made to take advantage of the possibilities involved for effecting the development of Boston into one of the world's great seaports. On the other hand the wonderful and inviting opportunities attending the recreation of our merchant fleet were quickly recognized and seized by seaboard cities whose shipping business prior to the war was developing very slowly, but whose sensitiveness to possibilities was quickened into immediate action by the stimulus of the great number of new ships suddenly rendered available.

Those cities immediately decided to become great seaports and enthusiastic commercial action thereby has resulted in extraordinary development. Boston—essentially a seaport, provided by nature with one of the finest harbors on the coast, so geographically located as to be the logical American port for European shipment, the great market place of the greatest manufacturing section of the country and possessing a wonderful shipping heritage as an inspiration, was alone so long after these cities as to overlook the psychological moment and her maritime interests and possibilities have received scant attention from the general community.

NEGLECTING OPPORTUNITY.

Why does not Boston look upon ocean shipping as a business into which she can put capital and the wonderful business ability which has been so productive in other directions? London, Hamburg, Manchester, New York and other cities have considered ocean shipping as highly attractive and profitable and have prospered by their intensive development thereof. It is an indisputable fact that Boston is deliberately neglecting a wonderful opportunity for profitable investment by refusing to realize that the elements of a really great port exist here and by refraining to take those remedial and constructive steps which would inevitably result in its growth.

Unaided by exceptional effort on the part of the general business community of Boston, lacking the railroad differentials enjoyed by Philadelphia and Baltimore, lacking the benefits of the aggressive efforts in the great export freight producing territory of the West, which trunk railroads operating from that territory to the ports named, and to New York, are making in behalf of their home ports, and unsupported by an active community interest in the port which her sister ports enjoy, the shipping business of the port, owing partly to general shipping conditions and partly to the enterprise of those interested vitally concerned, is nevertheless increasing and there is gradually developing in Boston a keener interest in the port which bodes well for the future.

Interest in the port has materially increased during the last year. The Massachusetts Commission on Foreign and Domestic Commerce, one purpose it is to promote the commercial development of the State is taking steps which it is hoped will hasten the development of the port and will greatly increase its shipping business. A list of sailings is being sent to western shippers every week. Numerous new steamship services, never before enjoyed by Boston, have been established since the armistice was signed, and services are now operating to Argentine, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Canal Zone, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, England, France, Gibraltar, Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Philippine Islands, Roumania, Scotland, Sweden, Turkey, leading ports of U. S., Uruguay.

EXPORTS SHOW BIG GAIN.

The total export trade of Boston have increased from $123,631,151 for the year ending June 30, 1914, to $623,313,028 for the calendar year 1919. The imports of the Massachusetts Customs District now place Boston in the second position among the American ports, and the growth in volume of her exports from $65,715,181 for the year ending June 30, 1914, to $234,554,621 for the calendar year 1919 indicates an increase which, if continued, will eventually place Boston next to New York in exports.

Notwithstanding the wonderful capabilities of the port, Boston has indulged in much destructive discussion regarding it. Commissions of various kinds have pointed out shortcomings and local newspapers have given reports of the findings of those commissions a good deal of publicity, which has made an unfortunate impression upon the minds of Western shippers; and the local press has often queried—with good intentions—"What is the matter with the Port of Boston?" as though something fundamentally wrong was sapping its life.

There is something wrong with every port; but why not talk sunshine instead of gloom? why not emphasize the good points of the Port of Boston and "do the best with what we've got?" Other communities desirous of making the most of their resources would very highly prize the possession of a port with such potential possibilities as has the Port of Boston. What the port needs more than anything else is the support of a sincere and aggressive community interest in it that does not now exist, but it is developing.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

Massachusetts has expended millions of dollars in improving the port of Boston but no accompanying aggressive effort has been made to procure business for it; the State may spend millions of dollars more in improvements, but unless Boston is willing to compete in the most effective manner possible with the aggressive activities in the Middle West not only of New York, but of Philadelphia, Baltimore and New Orleans, such expenditures will not bring the desired results.

Some time Boston will cease to revel, as a sufficient demonstration of her interest in maritime affairs, in her sea-glory of clipper days. The economic law underlying the geographical location of Boston as the most logical port from which to ship export freight to Europe and to many other foreign destinations will some day be recognized and will compel the intensive development of this transportation route. Why not follow the lead of the other great seaboard cities and "do it now?"

FISH STORAGE EXPLAINED

Tests Show Frozen Product as Good as Fresh, Says Gardner Poole

"When fish are properly frozen, glazed and held in storage for reasonable periods, no lessening of food value or palatability can be noticeable to the consumer," declared Gardner Poole, president of the Commonwealth Ice Cold Storage Company, today.

In explaining the functions of a cold storage plant, he denied that they are used "for the purpose of increasing the fish man's unholy profits." To a reporter for the American, he said:

"We find that a very marked prejudice exists in the minds of a large number of consumers against frozen fish. In fact, there are at least two erroneous beliefs. One is that cold storage food is more or less bad food and the other that cold storage plants are used only for the purpose of increasing the fish man's unholy profits.

"This is far from the truth. Fish cold storage plants, and for that matter storage plants for all kinds of food, have a legitimate place in business. It is the cold storage plant that provides a constant supply of certain goods the year round. They insure proper distribution and stabilize prices.

"During certain seasons fish are produced in quantities far in excess of immediate needs, and the ordinary channels of trade being blocked, the product is dammed back and must be diverted to other channels to be conserved and without methods of effective conservation these vast temporary surpluses would go to waste.

"Before the method of cold storage was known, large quantities of fish were saved, as they still are, by canning, salting, pickling and smoking. The most effective method, however, in modern times is by freezing and storage, as the process does not alter the flavor or appearance of the fish and therefore makes fish available in and out of season in almost a natural condition.

"Tests have been made by the United States Bureau of Chemistry on frozen fish held for excessively long periods, sample lots being withdrawn and analyzed at different times. These tests showed no significant difference in composition between frozen fish and samples of fresh fish of the same variety and no loss of food value was noted.

"It is true that some varieties of fish are not as tender when thawed out as when taken from the water, but this is due largely to the fact that in some fish the muscle cells of the body contain large percentages of moisture and readily burst by expansion in the process of freezing.

"Some retailers show a prejudice against frozen fish and do not handle them, while others do not thaw them but thaw them out and in many cases sell them as fresh products.

America's Fisheries—An Undeveloped Industry of Great Possibilities

In its rich fisheries the United States possesses an undeveloped natural resource which needs only organization, capital and brains to make it one of the nation's greatest industries.

The American fisheries have hitherto been conducted so inefficiently that fish as an important food staple has failed to win the nation-wide popularity and market it deserves. So crude has been the organization of our fisheries, particularly as regards distribution, that fish in sufficient quantities and of good quality has been unobtainable regularly by much of our inland population.

The U. S. Bureau of Fisheries states that there is a huge unsatisfied demand for fish, especially in the Middle West and South. An enormously rich field awaits the wide-awake concern which enters the fish industry properly organized and equipped. In England, where twenty-five years ago the fisheries were in as chaotic a state as here now, more capital is profitably employed in the fisheries than in the American beef industry. The American beef supply is decreasing, and the consumption of fish will constantly grow.

The problems of handling and distributing fish and beef are identical, and progressive concerns are meeting them the right way, equipped with ample capital, fleets of steam trawlers, big central plants and excellent merchandising systems. All honor to these companies for their far-sighted progressiveness!

AMERICAN OLYMPIC ATHLETES SET SAIL FOR ANTWERP TODAY

GIVEN BIG SENDOFF BY FANS

Thousands Gather in Manhattan Opera House to Bid Godspeed to Favorites

By CHARLES E. PARKER,
The American's Staff Correspondent With the Olympic Team.

New York, July 26.—They bade goodbye to America's Olympic team today. The official farewell ceremonies were conducted in the Manhattan Opera House, and if the enthusiasm and well wishes expressed and evidenced in that crowded edifice can be taken as an indication of what our boys are shortly to do at the Antwerp Olympics, that set of contests already is won by an overwhelming margin.

Never has there been such a turning out of athletic fans. The Manhattan Opera House, large as it was, could not begin to accommodate the gathering. Long before the time set for the exercises every seat and every inch of standing room was crammed to the utmost. The athletes marching to the exercises had literally to battle their way through the throngs that lined the streets and fell in behind, and when the opera house was reached this battling forward was still more intensified.

Cheers and shouts of well wishes to the men individually or as the American team echoed all along the way.

Team Assembles at Olympic Headquarters

Shortly before noon the more than 300 entrants who will wear the American shield in Belgium assembled at the Olympic headquarters, No. 280 Broadway, and under command of Manager Halpin, they marched to the opera house in double file and took position on the immense stage. The track athletes composing one such group, the boxers another, the wrestlers a third group and the fencers a fourth.

The ceremonies were comparatively short. To the accompaniment of three bands the entire audience joined in the opening number, the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner." This was followed by the reading of scores of telegrams and communications from prominent National and State officials, each wishing the party fidently predicting success for the team at Antwerp.

Then came the reading by President Gustavus T. Kirby of the Olympic Committee of the names of the athletes officially selected to represent the Nation at Antwerp. Not a name was read but was promptly met with a wild outburst from the crowd, Joie Ray, Frank Foss and the New York police triumvirate, Pat McDonald, Matt McGrath and Pat Ryan, came in for the wildest of these wild greetings, and while not one would turn a hair if he broke a record the blushes that appeared on his pace were worthy of a girls' college commencement.

Athletes From All Sections Cheered

The big audience was truly representative. This was evidenced in the cheers that greeted each athlete as his name was called; if said athlete were a New Englander there was a delegation from that section which led the outburst and continued cheering after the others had stopped, but same was true as regards the men from the Middle West and from the Coast, and that many of their personal friends and relatives were numbered in the crowd was attested by the half hour immediately following the official program, when such persons were given opportunity of saying more intimate goodbyes to the members of the teams.

Following this the athletes again were assembled in march formation and preceded by the Seventh Regiment Band marched to a North River pier where they boarded launches for the trip to Hoboken to the waiting transport Princess Matoika, which lists today gets underway for Antwerp.

Big Sendoff for U. S. Olympic Cyclists

Newark, N. J., July 26.—America's cyclists who will represent the United States at the Olympic games in Belgium, were given a great ovation when they raced at the Velodrome in the championship contests here. The bicycle racers and two other Newark athletes who will go to Antwerp for the Olympic tournaments were presented with huge bouquets by their many admirers. Newark is sending six athletes to Belgium, four of them wheelmen.

Spaniards Eliminate U. S. Poloists

Ostend, Belgium, July 26.—America was eliminated from the Olympic polo contests, when Spain won by thirteen goals to three. A contest between the Spanish and English teams remains to be played, and the winner will then meet the Spanish poloists for the championship.

BRAVES WIND UP WESTERN TRIP

Ninth Inning Rally Brings Victory to Tribe. Ray Powell the Big Hero

St. Louis, July 26.—The Braves had the satisfaction of checking the pennant aspiration of several Western foes during the journey just ended and which resulted in seven victories and eleven defeats. The finish saw three out of five over the Cardinals, with each game decided by one run. Six of the seven victories for the seventh placers came by one run, showing the close battle the Stallings entry put up each day.

While, of course, the Braves lack the pennant punch, nevertheless they gave stiff opposition throughout their road journey, and back home the Miracle Man has an idea that he may get as high as the first division.

Closest Flag Race in N. L. History

With the closest race in the history of the National League one club will advance with a brief winning streak, the Cubs took three out of four and were four points from first place and now they are below the .500 mark.

The Braves exhibited an unexpected swatting punch frequently against the Cardinals, and with a bit of luck they would have cleaned up on Branch Rickey's entry. In Saturday's game they had a lead of one run going into the eighth, when Heathcote tripled and McHenry tied it with a single. The Cards won in the tenth.

The Braves were on the verge of being nosed out Sunday. They carried a 1 to 0 lead until the eighth inning with Watson pitching as he did when he beat Grover Alexander, 1 to 0. A pinch hitter jarred him, though. After McHenry died on strikes, Schultz singled through Boeckel. Smith singled to left. Fournier single to centre, filling the bases, but Smith was caught on his way to third. Stock singled and Fournier put the Cardinals in front by one run.

Games This Week.
Tuesday—Shepard vs. Butler.
Wednesday—Shuman vs. Talbot.
Thursday—White vs. Hovey.

The Talbot Company is now leading the Department Store League. White and Talbot are tied for the first place last week. Talbots, by winning their game from Shuman, Monday night, got only a tie game, gained the lead. Hovey and White are now tied for second place. Their game, which is to be played on Thursday, should be the best exhibition of the season and will also make a big change in the standing. The game between Shepards and Butlers Tuesday should be an interesting one. Shepard has a slight edge on their rivals having won one game while the Butler crowd has yet to win their first game.

The A. Shuman nine has another tough game this week when the Talbot team is played. Tom Raffery's nine was beaten by a top flowy score by Hovey, while Talbot was giving Shepard a 17-run spanking. Shuman will have to play a better brand of ball if they are to stay with the Hovey bunch.

R. H. White and Hovey, both first division teams, should furnish the best game of the week. Hovey has a chance to get the lead in the league by beating White.

Tom Raffery, the former Cleveland player, performed in two games last week and is slowly getting back to his former self. The only thing that bothers him is his batting eye which should return before the season gets much older.

Americans Hoped for Barnes' Victory

This is the final article in a series on the British open golf championship by Robert E. Harlow, golf editor of the American.

By ROBERT E. HARLOW.

With Walter Hagen out of the running for the British open championship at Deal, the interest of the Americans centered in Jim Barnes of the Sunset Hill Club of St. Louis, for Jim did a 79 and a 74 on the first day and was in a tie for second place at 153 with Alex Herd.

Jim was very popular at Deal for he resembled the British professionals. He played all his rounds in the same suit, which included long trousers, not too well pressed, and a rolling coat which had seen service before it reached Deal. It was the same outfit Barnes wore in American last season.

Added to his mild tans in dress, Barnes did not engage a valet or chauffeur for his visit in England, or do anything which made sensational copy for the local writers. He was quiet and unassuming and strode over the Deal course with a spry, if clover in his mouth. The Englishmen appeared pleased that Barnes finished on the money, although they were glad that he was not on top.

Barnes Had Chance at End of Third Round

With the third round completed Jim was in a position to win for the leaders were closely bunched, with L. Holland of Northamptonshire leading the field with 222. Alex Herd and Barnes were 223, Abe Mitchell, George Duncan and J. Wingate 224 and Jap 225. This meant that any one of a number who shot in the very low round would win.

Duncan was the first of the leaders to get off on his final round and when he came in with a fine 72 for a total of 303, the galleries knew that anyone who could beat that figure would win. As Barnes started the final round with one stroke advantage over Duncan, he needed a 72 to win. Jim strove long but could not sharply five where he needed fours, and finished with a 79.

Jim's game was much better suited to the wind-swept Deal course than was Hagen's, for the St. Louis professional hit a low ball off the tee, hit long, low push shots with his irons and when on the green resorted to the pitch and run. He played skilful, careful golf all the way to the final nine holes, and began to fade in the drive home against a powerful wind. This was the only part of the tournament to shoot each round under 80. His rounds were 79-74-79-72.

Mitchell's Failure Big Blow to Britons

Hagen's failure was no more disappointing to Americans than was Mitchell's blow-up to the British. Mitchell was a prime favorite going into the third round, and carried a tremendous gallery. He collapsed completely. Mitchell drove well enough to the first hole on the fatal round, but his pitch to the green left him on edge for he took three to a bunker. He laid it within two feet of the hole and to the horror of about 5,000 Englishmen, he nearly missed the ball, knocking it but a foot, and took a five.

He hooked his tee shot into the rough at the second and took another five. On the third hole, after a heavy, his second was just out, his third on the edge, for he took three putts for a six. At the short fourth he took three putts for a four and the fifth came on a 7.

Mitchell topped his drive into a bunker, by well, but missed his third was out and his fourth short. His fifth was too strong and ran over the green and he needed three more to get down in eight. With such a start an 84 was the best he could do for the round. Although the 84 made his total but 231, two shots behind the leader, his confidence was gone and he did well to finish in the afternoon with a 76.

Duncan Brilliant on Third Round

Duncan, on the contrary, was never more brilliant than in the third round. With two rounds of 80 each behind him, he commenced his third with 5, 4, 3, 3 and reached the turn in 33. He had a four-foot putt for a 32. He stood on the 10th tee with a four for a 69, but he looked up on his second and missed and was over with his third, taking a 6 for a 71.

Duncan came near slipping at the tenth green, both morning and afternoon, when each time he hit his second too hard and the ball rebounded down a four-foot embankment and in the rough. In the morning he chipped dead and got a four, and in the afternoon he holed the shot. He just missed home after this.

Plays 167 Continuous Holes of Golf

Winnipeg, Manitoba, July 26.—What is thought to be a new world's record for continuous golf was made by A. C. Turner over a Saskatoon (Saskatchewan) golf course when he played 167 holes in seventeen hours and twenty-three minutes. Turner started at 3:03 a. m. and finished at 8:25 p. m.

Vardon and Lapham Win Apawamis Match

New York, July 26.—Harry Vardon, paired with Roger Lapham, amateur of the home club, yesterday afternoon beat Edward Ray, linked with Findlay S. Douglas, also on his own health, by 1 up in an exhibition golf round at the Apawamis Club.

In the morning Ray, also paired with Lapham, defeated Vardon and Douglas 2 down, over the same course.

The second round developed the better play. Vardon getting a 39 after luncheon, three strokes better than Ray's 72 in the morning, when Vardon was 75.

Vardon, with birdie 3s on the third and fourth holes, in the afternoon led the way. Douglas, a leading figure in the short twenty years ago, but now almost forgotten, got into the game at the sixth, which he won in 4 to 5 as a foil to the others.

Vardon brought his side back to 2 up again, with a birdie 3 at the seventh but Ray was down in a regulation 3 at the twelfth, and turned the same trick at the thirteenth, only in that case it was a birdie. That squared the match.

Ray's "streak" continued at the fourteenth where he was the only one of the quartet to tally par 4, putting his side into the lead for the first time. Douglas trailed along with a 5 to 4 a four to others at the fifteenth. Ray thought his side would be dormie 3 against the sixteenth, for there he plumped in for a birdie 3, but Vardon sank a splendid putt of eight feet down hill, robbing an Eagle 2. The hole in 2½ yards.

That squared the match a second time. Ray needed a 6 at the seventeenth, the others being 5 apiece. Lapham got a birdie 3 at the eighteenth, but Vardon would have taken the hole in par 4 anyway, as Ray and Douglas each took 5's.

The amateurs picked up no fractional point by the victory, however, for Vardon has a four for a 69, but he looked up on his second and missed and was

Red Sox Play Last Game on Polo Grounds Before Starting West

New York, July 26.—The Red Sox dropped off here for a short two-day trip on their way to the West and picked up quite a nice bit of change, business but didn't profit any in the standing of the club. The two former Red Sox stars, Ruth and Mays, were too much for the Bostonians and how! The latter scored an easy victory. Only four hits were jolted out of Mays in the best game he has pitched against Boston this season, while the big Babe was up to his usual stunts.

Ruth still loves his fellow pitchers of the Boston club. He couldn't endure to see Hilly Chicago led in having more Ruth homers knocked against it than any other team, so the Babe turned it up for the Red Sox. The two Sox teams now are tied for the honor of furnishing the setting for the most Ruth homers. Each has yielded eight.

Babe Got Double as Well as Homer

In addition to hitting his thirty-fifth homer, needing only one more to make his July dozen, Ruth smacked a double and a sacrifice fly.

Harry Harper hoped to get an even break on the short series by taking today's game and decided to pitch against Pennock. Pennock is one of Ruth's favorite home run pitchers, but he can feed the rest of the Yanks with his left-handed speeders.

KRAMER AND EGG WIN NEWARK TANDEM RACE

Newark, N. J., July 26.—Frank Kramer and Oscar Egg won a two-mile tandem race from Arthur and Willie Spencer at the Velodrome.

Grow Tire Victorious

The Grow Tire team fell on the delivery of Pitcher Gordan of the Dorchester Town Team in the seventh inning, scoring three runs and winning the game, 4 to 1. It was the second game of the Dorchester team in fourteen starts.

BATTLE TO GET TITLE BOUT

Fulton and Wills See Victor in Tonight's Mill Matched to Meet Dempsey

By JACK CONWAY.

Fred Fulton will try to win a bout with Jack Dempsey by defeating Harry Wills in a twelve-round tussle at Newark tonight. The champion has informed Tex Rickard he will clash with the winner of this evening's encounter provided the public and press demand him to do so.

"If Wills wins will you set up the color line?" Benny Murphy, manager of Frankie Callahan, asked Dempsey in New York last week.

"I'm afraid of no fighter in the world, and black Dempsey. "I think I can beat Wills as easily as any of the other big fellows. I won't meet him, however, unless the public and press demand me to do so. If I should clash with Wills merely because I personally wanted to do so and should lose my title, I would be criticized everywhere. But if there is a demand for a bout between Wills and myself, I don't intend to do any sidestepping. I'm world's heavyweight champion, and it is up to me to fight anybody the public demands."

Fulton believes he will gain the honor this p. m. The plasterer has a good left hand, but as his right is virtually useless he will experience some tough sledding when opposed to Wills. The latter is one of the world's best heavyweights and will probably go to the post a favorite.

Eddie Fitzsimmons to Battle Dundee

Eddie Fitzsimmons and Johnny Dundee are booked to box twelve rounds at the same show. The weight for this match will be 132 pounds ringside. Fitzsimmons will find it very difficult to plant his famous left on Dundee's chin.

Frank Moran and Bert Kenney, and Jack Britton and Marcel Thomas are booked to meet at the same show. The affair is being staged by the International Sporting Club of New York, which was obliged to arrange to hold its affair in Jersey when it failed to get its own quarters completed in time.

The many friends of the late Joe Cummings, boxing instructor at the Y. M. C. A., are a fund for his family. Cummings was a credit to sport and did a lot to stimulate interest in boxing. His many friends throughout Boston and New England will be glad to contribute to this fund. Contributions should be sent to Harry O. Russ, Boston Athletic Association, Exeter street.

Big Overhead at Wrestling Bout

Another example of the terrific overhead at wrestling is offered by the contest to occurred at Revere last Thursday night when Lou Daro put on one of the best wrestling cards ever staged in this section. The gate received for the match between Joe Stecker and Reuben Bardin amounted to a little more than $13,000. The total receipts for the contest were about $14,000 which didn't give the promoter much satisfaction from a financial standpoint. Daro has now established himself as a big league promoter in the game of the squared try and will make up his loss many times over in future ventures.

Daro was obliged to give 20 per cent. of his gate receipts to the Revere Cycle Track Association. This item alone amounted to more than $2,500. Stecker drew down $4,000 for his services, while the other wrestlers were also well paid. These payments along with the routine expenses of putting on a big show created a deficit.

Daro, however, plans to stage another tournament at Revere in three weeks' time, while he intends to put on a championship affair on Labor Day.

Golf News and Notes

Francis Ouimet and Jesse Guilford had a best ball of 65 over the Belmont Springs Country Club course Sunday. There they went to tune up for their big match there Friday against Harry Vardon and Ray, two of the British professionals who have been administering some severe treatment to American amateurs and professionals on their latest American tour.

If the Massachusetts amateurs can duplicate that 65 on Friday, morning the famous British team will have to hole a few brassie shots in order to win. Everyone considered the Belmont match will be the most interesting in which Vardon and Ray will appear in this country.

Golfers who visit Belmont Friday should take note of Ouimet's position at the finish of an approach shot. It is about the best thing in golf to see and gives a splendid idea of what perfect golf should look like. No other golfer looks quite as good as Francis at the completion of an approach shot.

Vardon and Ray Tackled Walter Hagen and Jim Barnes at New London today. Hagen arrived in New London Saturday, only in time to wish Jim Massey, the French professional, luck in the match he was to play with the British open championship. Hagen announced that he would return to the course next year and play again in the open championship. He made the following statement concerning his play at Deal:

It was at the seaside, and I was certainly not at my best. I was off guard and had to learn the game and conditions of playing firmly as I usually do. I had to play short. I began to feel myself getting the hang of it toward the end, and instead of playing for the hole I played very loosely, and when I found I had lost my touch there was absolutely no hope.

Massachusetts golfers will be entertained this week at an open tournament at Wollaston, on Wednesday and Thursday. Play will be eighteen holes medal handicap.

"Bugs" Baer

New York is saving an hour of daylight for a couple of platinum set yachts to waste.

One race was called off because there was no wind. Saturday's tacking tournament was cancelled because there was too much wind. The entry in Kenney's Fables handed a guy for blowing hot and cold with one breath. Same in the yacht races, except they use a thermos bottle first and grab the hot and cold breath afterwards.

Yachting is mostly a pair of creased flannel trousers and income.

A bowlegged Erie Canal scow captain, driving one knock-kneed mule tandem, could spot either one of those pearl-handled yachts twenty miles and beat ten knuckles down. The Erie Canal doesn't go to the best piers on earth, but it goes straight. A yacht race seems to be the longest distance between two points.

It is the only sport in the world where you can run up a thousand-mile mileage book and not get anywhere.

The boys pull and haul on the ropes and jerk six mils and the captain's undershirt up to the peak halyards metropolitan top-sail keel mast. Then they pull and haul the works down again while the cap smiles pretty for the camera. Somebody throws a boatswain's cinchnet and the crew starts pinning tag with all the ropes marked "hands off."

About this time, a fugitive sardine shoots the boat's wake in full of congested emotion and the cup orders a few pair of shoes and heads it for the dry dock. The crew goes out to the Zoo and keeps in sail making shake by using the tail of an elephant's trunk and pulling his ears up to the jib spinnaker. The cap has another turn in a telephone booth and with his binoculars trained on the main spring, he sees a boatswain's mate turn him a good jitney for a plugged one.

* * *

After a day in the dry incubator the yacht is hatched again and the mate is rounded last where it was interrupted by the racing.

The boys pull and haul while the cap gives 'em the run-around.

* * *

A breeze pops forth and the frightened yacht is put into the dusty garage to have the wind scraped off her sails.

Some more pulling and hauling and the scows do an old-fashioned minuet for a couple of hours. Then the captain, a member of newsboys from the West End, in the first ball game that the boys of the island have been allowed to play with an outside team. Wilson.. 2 0 0 0 0 0 0—3 11 1 carried away, and in the second she won by her time allowance.

Deciding Race Over Course Fifteen Miles to Windward and Return

All the way through she showed her superiority on the wind, her skipper outclassing the Britisher at every point of the game.

With her huge spread of canvas Shamrock was able to pick up some of the difference on the fifteen-mile run home, but never enough to win.

BOTH BOATS OVERHAULED.

A complete overhauling of the two boats yesterday did not disclose the slightest damage to their hull or gear, and this says something for stability when it is considered that the wind, during the race hours on Saturday the boats were heeling before it, at times attained a speed of thirty miles and more.

Sir Thomas Lipton stated yesterday on his steam yacht Victoria: "It's a long drawn out contest this time, but my little boat will be sufficiently in front when the finishing blow."

YACHTS READY EARLY.

Shamrock shook out and bolsted her mainsail at 9:15 (daylight saving time). The wind at that time held to the northwesterly direction. It was about a ten-knot breeze.

At 9:35 shamrock with mainsail set and jibs aloft in stays broke anchor and started for sea in tow of her tender. Resolute with mainsail stretched still swung at her mooring buoy.

At 10 o'clock Shamrock, off the point of the Hook, caught a shift of wind from the eastward, dropped her tug and stood away to starboard on starboard tack.

This sudden shift of wind meant that the breeze will swing around to the southward before the race starts, which would give the yachts a beat to windward for fifteen miles along the Jersey shore to turn off Asbury Park and a run home before the wind.

OFF FOR STARTING POINT.

Shamrock came about to port at 10:10 and at 10:15, after testing out the wind, called for her tug and combined tug, to be the starting point.

At the same moment Resolute broke out her other jib and dropped her moorings. Accompanied by her tender steaming alongside and ready for a tow if needed, she came about on starboard tack under her own sail, holding the wind from the due east. As she passed the towed seaward she set her jibtopsail.

Watch for This Story in Motion Pictures

"The World and His Wife," soon to be seen in motion pictures at the best theatres, is a Cosmopolitan production released as a Paramount-Artcraft picture from the play by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger, founded on the dramatic verse of Jose Echegaray.

THE STORY TO DATE

In romantic Seville Don Julian Gorgas, an influential man past the flush of youth, falls in love with Teodora, a beautiful orphan, who reciprocates his affection. Don Julian promises an aged friend that he will look out for his son, Ernesto, a dreamy young poet. The father dies and Julian marries Teodora. Later, Ernesto comes to live in Julian's home, and she goes about with him at Don Julian's request, thereby furnishing a chance for gossip and giving Don Alvarez, a rival of Julian's for diplomatic honors, an opportunity to make slurring remarks.

Screen Version Novelized

By Jane McLean

"COME, come," Captain Wickersham, an attache of the English embassy, broke in, "you're making a mountain of a molehill—a love affair out of a bit of platonic friendship."

"Plato covers a multitude of excuses," lauched Alvarez, anxious not to quarrel with this Englishman, who stood staring at him with steady blue eyes waiting for him to name the woman.

The Poison Works

That word did not come. Alvarez was nothing if not diplomatic. He knew, too, that the most powerful accusation was the accusation that comes with the innuendo and not with the out and out thrust. He had sowed the poison and he left it to do its work.

The arrival of Don Severo and Mercedes came as a pleasant surprise to the master of the house, who could not divine the nature of their errand.

Their demeanor toward the poet was frigid to the point of rudeness, and while they treated Teodora with respect they showed none of the tenderness that Julian might have expected them to evince.

Later, when the two brothers had a moment to themselves, Don Severo left no to the occasion of his visit.

"This young man, Ernesto, is he here for long." He asked the question casually.

"For as long as he cares to stay," replied Julian. "You remember, of course, what his father did for me when I arrived here without friends and how highly our father respected him."

"Don Carlos, peace to his ashes; yes, I remember him well—but, my dear brother, why should Ernesto rely on your bounty to spend his time in idleness?"

Julian smiled. "You and I do not understand such temperaments; he is a poet; we are men of the world. He dreams of romance and writes in dactyls, while we perform the heavy prose."

Trusting Too Far

"Julian—the other leaned forward—you are a foolish man; you are trusting this poet too far."

Julian stared. "Trusting him with what?"

"With the inner of your name," said the other, with all the solemnity of which he was capable.

"In what way?"

"Can you ask? Does not Teodora go out driving with him and does not the world gossip?"

For a moment the older man gazed at his brother as though the mere idea was too ridiculous to be considered, then he smiled. "My dear Severo, you are tilting at windmills. The boy has for me only the sincerest devotion—Teodora will tell you the same thing."

"Julian, I heard of this affair, this mad trust of yours, in Madrid, ward—'you are a foolish man; you should send him away. She world will not believe in him as you do, and why should you subject your name to the gabblers in every cafe? No, innocent as they are, it makes no difference. The world is not used to seeing things in that light, and it's the world you have to consider and the world you have to live in."

Base Conclusions

"And suppose I should send him away," said Julian, "what would be the result of my action? Simply this—the world that you quote so glibly would immediately conclude I was forced to get rid of the young man and draw even baser conclusions."

"No!" Don Severo raised a protesting hand. "It has already drawn those conclusions, my brother; already this intimacy, this friendship is the common talk among your friends. One hears it everywhere; you cannot escape, Julian, save by showing the world that you can dispense with the presence of this stranger in your home and that things will run on without him as they did before he came."

Julian, listening patiently, could not find it in his heart to give credence to the preposterous thought conveyed in the words of his brother. To him it seemed the height of wickedness to even suspect two guileless beings such as he felt Teodora and Ernesto to be capable of dealing him a blow in the back. No, it was impossible; every time he looked into their eyes he read only love in the wife's and admiration and trust in the boy's.

As Clear as Mud

Father!" said the son, looking up from a book with a puzzled expression on his face, "what is pride?"

"Pride," returned the father, "pride! Why-a— Oh, surely you know what pride is. A sort of being stuck up, a kind of—well, proud, you know. Just get the dictionary, that's the thing to tell you exactly what it is. There's nothing like a dictionary, Johnnie."

"Here it is," said the latter, after an exhausting search. "Pride—being proud."

"Um—yes, that's it," replied the father.

"But"—

"Well, look at 'proud.' That's the way you have got to hunt these things out, my lad."

"I've got it," answered Johnnie. "Pre-pri—pro— Why"—

"What does it say?"

"Proud—having pride."

"That's it! There you are, as clear as day. I tell you, Johnnie, there is nothing like a good dictionary when you are young. Take care of the binding, my son, as you put it back."

Style That Is Always New

ABOUT OUR GOOD FRIEND

Baxter

Copyright, 1920, by The Ledger Syndicate

BAXTER
VARIATIONS — Backster, Baker.
RACIAL ORIGIN — Anglo-Saxon.
SOURCE—An occupation.

THIS name is typical of a very large class of our family names, that which has been developed from occupations, and it is of particular interest as involving peculiar changes which have taken place in the masculine and feminine forms of many English words.

The family name of Baxter is directly traceable to the feminine form of the old Anglo-Saxon word for "baker," and which appeared, about the time family names began to develop out of mere descriptive appellations, in both the forms of "bakester" and "baxter."

It does not necessarily follow, however, that all the Baxter families were founded by women bakers, and we more than that the Baker families are all descended from some particular man who followed this avocation, notwithstanding the fact that women commercial bakers were very numerous. The truth is that by the time the family names began to crystallize the masculine and feminine forms of the word had become confused, as is today the case in our word "youngster," which generally is used in reference to boys, and is less often inclusive of girls. Yet this word is a feminine form.

The masculine, which has long been out of use, should be "younger," corresponding to the German "junker."

Sometimes, but infrequently, Baxter is traceable as a corruption of Beck, which, in the pronunciation of Sussex, would tend to become "Back," then "Bachs," and finally Baxter.

Most of the Baxters in America, probably, are descended from Thomas and Rebecca Baxter, whose dates of arrival here are obscured. A Gregory Baxter, near to them, settled at Roxbury in 1630. His daughter, Abizail, married Joseph Adams and they were the grandparents of John Adams, the second President of the United States.

Another well-known Baxter was a Captain John, who arrived here in 1664, in command of a company of Irish volunteers. For his services he received a grant of land at Throgg's Neck, New Netherlands, from the Dutch. Later there was a controversy about this, and he is supposed to be the mysterious Baxter who, because of double dealing toward him on the part of the Dutch, helped to take New Netherlands from these and give it to the English.

The Baxters were early identified with Roger Williams in the settlement of Rhode Island and the Providence Plantations. They were an early American family, of energy and piety, and made their influence felt wherever they chose their home.

When a Girl Marries

By Ann Lisle

AUNT Mollie is a dear little old lady, with apple cheeks, little brown beads for eyes, and thick gray hair, parted in the middle and crowning her head in a neat braids. Her figure is scant across the chest and rolled out a bit under her waist of brown shot silk. She wore a round collar of tatting, a large pink cameo to fasten it and a black velvet chain, on which amethysts on each of her round, pretty white wrists.

What Could They See?

Severe gold-trimmed spectacles that would slide down from her little fine nose at any moment, and a bag from which she kept dropping the gray wool she was knitting into socks between dinner, completed my inventory of the dearest little old lady I'd ever seen.

Val seemed to adore the old couple, and they treated her as if she were the apple of their eye. And yet they were precisely the sort of people whom I would have imagined holding up their hands in Puritanical horror at Val's bizarre costumes and exotic manner. But she and they were clearly on a basis of complete understanding and affection almost more than mere.

I couldn't make it out. What under the sun could this amusing old pair see in Val Custis? Didn't they disapprove of her? They are clearly home folks from her part of the country. Don't they know the story of the way Val lured Lane from his poor crazy first wife, Loretta?

A question from Aunt Mollie promised an answer to one of mine ere long.

"Miss Harrison," said she, "our Val tells me that you ain't from a big city, either. It's wonderful how you two girls have got on to city ways. You got me first, though. Are you real careful what folks you let our Val meet?"

The little apple-cheeked old lady was peering at me intently, shrewdly over her glasses. And out of the tail of my eye I could see her husband watching her with admiring approval as he sat tilted back in a Sheraton chair, smoking with an accustomed air the sort of cigar which comes wrapped in silver foil and doesn't come less than two for a dollar.

"Val knows all the people I do now, Mrs. Pettingill. Probably you'll meet them if you stay here for a real visit. Then you can see for yourself. I've an idea you're an excellent judge of human nature, Mrs. Pettingill," I said, with what I hoped was tact, for I found myself wanting this little old lady to like me.

No Friend of Mine

"Mercy, child, call me Aunt Mollie! You're our Val's friend, and that makes us feel kinda kin," she said briskly, turning the heel intently, and then resuming the thread of her conversation. "Well, now, I met one friend—or rather acquaintance—of Val's I didn't think was such great shakes. Is she a lady friend of yours, too? Miss Mason, Miss Evelyn Mason by name?"

"She's no friend of mine," I replied, and the words burst out more emphatically than I realized until they were spoken.

"I knew it!" said Uncle Ned, rising and coming over to shake my hand as if he had decided that I was worth knowing. Then he turned to the little old wife with courtly dignity. "May I speak my piece, Ma?"

"Go on, Neddie," she smiled, looking up from the stocking heel to flash him a glance of affection and understanding that was like a benediction.

"I take it we're all friends," he said, and the compelling glances of his keen eyes would probably have made a traitor get up and slink from the room. "Well, Mollie and me met up with this Mason woman when we were vacationing at that swell resort—Atlantic City. And she kinda taking to some of the folks we was with, put up with the old gent and his bride, too.

"And one day, conversational-like when the bride where we come from, and where we are heading to, she starts on our Val. All she could twist and turn she balls up. And I had to set her straight. Maybe I wasn't none too gentle. And, finally, my bride over there she calls the turn just right. Tell 'em what you said, Mollie."

"Twas Ned's idea," protested Aunt Mollie gently. "We figgered out that this woman didn't understand our Val—never would. So we just thought that send her as how we've known and loved our Val a number of years we'd come to where she lives and put anyone that doesn't understand her on the right path. And at the same time, we thought we'd find out a leetle more about this Manon woman. That kind's easy to muzzle when you get 'em worked up for fear you'll kind of reveal the ways of their minds to folks."

Voice Deepened

At this point Val spoke. And now the cream of her voice had deepened and had the thrill of simple devotion. Everything about her revealed a primitive, unspoiled woman such as I had never glimpsed—even when I saw her at her best.

"Anne, have you listened to them?" she cried. "Have you heard the two truest friends in the world telling their idea of service? They're going to leave the ranch they adore and camp here in one of the cities that stifles them, so as to make sure that a malicious woman doesn't hurt Lane and me. What am I going to do to be worthy of such love?"

"What are you going to do?" I found myself repeating, wondering as I spoke what Val had already done to earn such devotion.

Miss Nilsson's Beauty Secrets

Anna Q. Nilsson, the wonderful motion picture actress, who is writing a series of articles on beauty secrets soon to appear in this paper, says that a beautiful, pure-white skin and complexion is the very best asset any girl or woman can have. She further states that the best and quickest way to obtain this is to use a simple toilet preparation, familiar to every well known actress. It is called Derwillo and can be obtained at the toilet counter of any up-to-date drug or department store. This wonderful Derwillo is used by over five hundred thousand discriminating girls and women throughout the country and is rapidly becoming a regular fad. It takes the place of face powder, stays on better and its use cannot be detected. Perspiration does not affect it and it will not rub off on clothing. Derwillo is especially recommended for dark, sallow, rough skin, freckles, tan, sun-burn and many other facial blemishes. Be sure to read Miss Nilsson's next article. In the meantime get Derwillo and try it to-day, you are sure to be delighted.—Advertisement.

Romantic Serial by a Noted Author

For several days following my first meeting with Val's friends, the Pettingills, I did little but proudly assist Val in showing "the city" to the dear little old lady. I found myself calling "Aunt Mollie" as naturally as if I'd known her since christening days.

Jim struck up a great friendship with Uncle Ned, and we six had the jolliest, most care-free time that has fallen to my lot in ages. It was temporarily interrupted when Uncle Ned invited the four "children"—as he called us—off for a week-end jaunt, and Jim had to renig at the last minute because of business.

That left me with an unoccupied Saturday on my hands, and belittling myself that I hadn't seen Carlotta for ages, I telephoned her and suggested a luncheon engagement. Hardly had we concluded arrangements when my telephone summoned me to a conversation with some one who felt about me just as I'd been feeling about Carlotta. It was Anthony Norreys clamoring for a sight of his long unseen friend.

"If Jim can finish an important business deal we're going out of town tomorrow and join some friends. And we've plans for tonight. That leaves this afternoon. I'm lunching with Carlotta Sturges. Want to pick me up for a walk about three?"

"Why are you dooming me to a solitary lunch, Anne?" asked Tony in his delightful voice. "I'd like nothing better than to join you and that nice Sturges girl for lunch, provided always that you beg and implore."

"I beg and implore," I replied, "it will be jolly to have you with us. I know Carlotta will like seeing you again."

I got to the place of our appointed meeting five minutes ahead of time, but there was Carlotta, over-prompt, too.

"I was so anxious for a glimpse of you, Nancy-Anne, that I came ahead of time, for fear I'd waste a minute," she cried effervescently, dubbing me with a new title to suit her mood and the propitious occasion.

The Rhyming Optimist

By Arline Michaelis.

LITTLE REGINALD JONES is a fortunate boy, for his parents have bought every kind of a toy that the factories make, and they let him make thinking up something new to bring Reginald joy. He has cars on a track, like a sure-enough train, and a battleship only a tar could explain; he has puppies and cats, marbles, baseballs and bats and a small sailing yacht and an aeroplane. But with all of these things in small Reggie content? Ah, no, for that isn't young Reginald's bent. His one mad desire is to play with the fire, and for all of his rich, then polish with a soft, dry duster. Cream and linseed oil mixed in equal proportions make a very good polish also, and a little lasts for a long time.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE boy—for as yet he was only a boy—sailed in May. The girl—who was swiftly stripping from her the last rainbow-ribbons of girlhood—was at the steamer to see him off—down from Poughkeepsie for that purpose.

And the instant she arrived he noticed what this last brief absence had done for her; how subtly her maturing self-confidence had altered the situation, placing her on a new footing with himself.

There was a little of the lean, long-legged, sweet-faced girl left; a slender yet rounded symmetry had replaced obvious joints and bones.

What is it—basketball?" he inquired admiringly.

"You like my figure?" she inquired guilelessly. "Oh, I've grown up within a month. It's just what was coming to me."

"Nice line of slang they give you up there," he said, laughingly. "You're nearly as tall as I am, too. I don't know you, little sister."

"You never did, little brother. You'll be sorry some day that you wasted all the school-girl adoration I lavished on you."

"Don't you intend to lavish any more?" he inquired, laughing, yet very keenly alert to her, smiling assurance, which was at the same time humorous, provocative and engaging.

"I don't know. I'm over my girlish illusions. Men are horrid pigs, mostly. It's a very horrid thing you're doing to me right now," she said, "going off to have a wonderful time by yourself for the next two years and leaving me to work in a children's hospital. But I mean to make you pay for it. Wait and see."

"If you'll come to Europe with me I'll take you," he said.

"You wouldn't. You'd hate it. You want to be free to prowl. So do I, and I mean to some day."

"Why not come now and prowl with me? I'll take care of you."

The girl looked at him with smiling interference:

"If dad hadn't expressed his wishes, and even if my aunt would let me go, I wouldn't—now."

"Why not?"

"Because I shall do no more tagging after you."

"What?"

A Permission

"No. And when you return I mean that you shall come and ask my permission to prowl with me.

"And if I find you interesting enough I'll let you. Otherwise, I shall prowl by myself or with some other man."

He was laughing, and her face, also, wore a bright and slightly malicious smile.

"You don't believe that's possible, do you, Jim?—a total reversal of our roles? You think little sister will tag gratefully after you always, don't you? Well, I mean to astonish you if little sister grow up into a desirable and ornamental woman of independent proclivities and tastes, and with a mind and a will of her own? And, to enjoy her company, you'd have to seek and prove yourself sufficiently interesting, and that you would have to respect her freedom and individuality as you would any man's?"

"I think, little sister," he said, laughing, "that you've absorbed a great deal of modern nonsense at Vassar; that you're as pretty as a peach, and that you'll not turn into a wind errant, but will become an ornament to your sex and to society, and that you'll marry in due time and do yourself proud."

"Children, you mean? Namerically?"

Stephanie's Views

Quantitatively and qualitatively. Also, you'll do yourself proud in the matronly example you'll set to women of this great Republic."

"That's what you think, is it?"

"I know it."

She smiled:

"Watch the women of my generation, Jim—when you can spare a few moments of your valuable time from writing masterpieces of fiction."

"I certainly shall. I'll study 'em. They're material for me. They are funny, you know."

"They are indeed," she said, her grey eyes full of malice. "Funnier than you dream of. You are going to see a generation that will endure no man-devised restrictions, submit to no tyrannical trammels, endure no masculine nonsense. You'll see this new species of woman coming faster and faster, thicker and thicker; each one knowing her own mind or intent on knowing it. You'll see them animated by a thousand new interests, pursuing a thousand new vocations, scornful of masculine criticism, impervious to admonition, regardless of what men think and say and do about it.

"That's what you'll see, Jim; a restless sex destroying their last barriers; a world of women contemptuous of men's opinions, conscious of their own rights, going after whatever they want, and doing it in their own way.

"If they wish to marry and bother with children they'll pick out a healthy man and do it; if not, they won't. Love plays a very small part in a man's life. Love, sentiment, domesticity and the nursery were once supposed to make up a woman's entire existence.

"Now, the time is coming very swiftly when love will play no more of a role in a woman's life than it does in a man's. She'll have her fling, first, if she chooses, just as freely as he does. And some day, if she finds it worth the inconvenience, she'll marry and take a year or two off and raise a few babies. Otherwise, decidedly not!"

"These are fine sentiments!" he exclaimed, laughing, yet not too genuinely amused. "I'm not sure that I'd better go and leave you here with that exceedingly pretty head of yours stuffed and seething with this sort of propaganda!"

"You might as well. The whole world is beginning to seethe with it. After all, what does it mean except equality of the sexes? Hands off—that's all it means."

"Are you a suffragette, Steve?" he inquired, smilingly.

All Old Stuff

"Oh, Jim, that's old stuff! Everybody is. All that is merely a matter of time, now. What interests us is our realization of our own individual independence. Why, I can't tell you what a delightful knowledge it is to understand that we can do jolly well what we please and not care a snap of our fingers for masculine opinion!"

"Truly a fine creed," he remarked. "What a charming bunch you must be training with at Vassar! I think I'll get off this steamer and remain here for a little scientific observation of your development and conduct."

"No use," she said gaily. "I've promised to learn to be a hospital nurse. After that, perhaps, if you return, you'll find me really worth observing."

"Is that a threat, Steve?" he asked, not too sincerely amused, yet still taking her and her chatter with a lightness and amiable condescension entirely masculine.

"A threat?"

"Yes. Do you mean that when I return I shall find my little sister a handful?"

A Farewell

"A handful? For whose hand? Jim, dear, you are old fashioned. Girls aren't on or in anybody's hands any more after they're of age. Do you think you'll be responsible for me? Dear child, we'll be comrades or nothing at all to each other. You really must grow up, little brother, before you come back, or I'm afraid—much as I love you—I might find you just a little bit prosy"——

The call for all ashore silenced her. She stood confronting Cleland with high color and pretty, excited gray eyes, for a moment more, then the gay defiance faded in her face and her attitude grew less resolute.

"Oh, Jim!" she said under her breath, "I adore you"— And melted into his embrace.

As he held her in his arms, for a moment the instinct to repel her and discourage himself came over him swiftly. A troubled idea that her lips were very soft—that he scarcely knew this girl whose supple figure he held embraced, left him mute, confused.

"Dear Jim," she whimpered, "I love you dearly. I shall miss you dreadfully. I'll always be your own little sister, Steve, and you can come back and bully me and I'll tag after you and adore you. Oh, Jim—Jim—my own brother—my own—my own!"

It was a bright, sunny, windy May day. He could still distinguish her in her black gown on the crowded pier, which was all a-flutter with brilliant gowns and white handkerchiefs.

After the distant pier had become only a square of color like a flower bed, he still stood on the lurching deck of the huge liner looking back at where he had seen her. The fragrance of her still clung to him—seemed to have been inhaled somehow and to have subtly permeated him—something of the warm, fresh, plastic youth of her—vanquished, utterly unawakened to anything more delicate or complex than the frank, vigorous passion of her affection.

Yet, as her breathless, tearful lips had clung to his, so the perfume of the embrace clung to him still, leaving him perplexed, vaguely disturbed, yet intensely conscious of new emotion, unfamiliar in his experience with this girl who yesterday had been what she always had been to him—a growing child to be affectionately looked after and chivalrously cherished and secured.

He Rebukes Himself

"I couldn't be in love with Steve," he said to himself incredulously. The thought amazed and exasperated him. "I'm a fine sort of man," he thought bitterly, "if I can't kiss Steve as innocently as she kisses me. There's something wrong with me. I must be a sort of dog—or crazy."

He went below.

Stephanie went back in the car alone. She staunched her tears with her black-edged handkerchief until they ceased to fill the wonderful gray eyes.

Later, detaching the limousine hand mirror, she examined her countenance, patted her chestnut-tinted hair, smoothed her mourning veil, and then, in order, lay back in the corner of the car and gave herself up to passionate memory of this boy whom she had adored from the first moment she ever laid eyes on him.

Two years' absence" She tried to figure to herself what that meant, but could not compass it. It seemed like a century of penance to be endured, to be lived through somehow.

Stocks Weak; Money 8%; Exchange Steady

STEEL ISSUES ARE LOWER

Market Reacts Quickly After a Tame Start and Declines

Become General

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were weak in New York at noon but were above the lowest level of the morning. As groups steels and motors were consistently lower. Sugars receded with the rest. Trading was quiet, first hour transactions not totalling much more than 100,000 shares. Call loans renewed at 8 per cent. Foreign exchange was steady, demand sterling opening at 3.75 3/8 and Continental rates being little lower.

Cuba Can declioned two points and Punto Alegre nearly as much. U. S. Steel was fractionally lower all the morning. Crucible was off more than two points at its lowest. Studebaker and Chandler sagged the most among motors.

WEAK AFTER IRREGULAR START

Prices eased off after an irregular opening and within half an hour the market was weak. Losses were small on the average, which was true of initial gains, but there were a number of issues to decline a point or more. Among them were Atlantic Gulf, Canadian Pacific, Houston Oil, Mexican Petroleum, Pan American, Stromberg, Pierce Arrow, Studebaker, Kelly Springfield, Endicott Johnson, Crucible, Republic, Vanadium and Southern Railway. First hour losses ranged from fractions to four points. Motors and steels were off at the opening and the supply of these issues so large that it met with general selling. Sugars were quiet, but Beet Sugar was one of the strongest stocks at the start. It soon lost part of its gain. Both oils and rails yielded with other classes. Liberty bonds ruled slightly lower.

TRADERS WATCHING EUROPE.

Not since the armistice that ended fighting between Germany and the allies have traders been more interested in European affairs. The war between Poland and Russia had reached a stage that was threatening to all Europe and to this country as well, but there is hope now that negotiations about to begin will do more to bring about real peace than any yet held by representatives of warring governments.

The money situation is no better, although the reserve ratio of the Federal system showed improvement last week, being 44.4 as compared with 43.9. But the sentimental effect of this is offset by a deficit of $4,276,529 in the reserve of New York Clearing House banks. The decline in that surplus reserve in a week was $23,512,650.

NEW ENGLAND COAL HELD BY SPECULATORS

According to an authority thousands of tons of coal are being withheld from New England by speculators who are "waiting for frantic bidding to drive the price higher." It is suggested that railroads ought to squelch these profiteers by forbidding reconsignments. It is stated that one railroad in this section is in such dire need of fuel that it keeps running only by borrowing coal from manufacturers. It is said concerning the New England situation:

"There are seventy-six public utilities that had less than twenty days' supply of coal on July 15 and forty-six that had less than nine days' supply on hand. This is a far more serious state of affairs with a New England industry than it would be with a plant in New York. To transport coal from the mine to a point east of the Hudson requires three weeks by rail and a month by boat."

To Take Over Bond Business

The Guaranty Co. of New York, Inc., has been incorporated to take over the bond department of the Guaranty Trust Co., and thereby facilitate the business of the bank in regard to investment securities. The new company is capitalized at $5,000,000, and all its stock will be issued and subscribed by the Guaranty Trust Co.

Number of Bank Depositors

Reports of May 4 showed that on that date there were 29,234,000 persons, firms, institutions, corporations or others in this country with bank deposits. Of this total 12,815,000 had deposits subject to withdrawals by check while there were 8,065,000 time or savings accounts.

Wall Street Gold Rumor

It was rumored on Wall Street at the end of the week that a British gold consignment of $10,000,000 is en route to this country.

Cotton Market Opening

New York, July 26.—The cotton market opened barely steady at a decline of 20 points on selling induced by weak cables. Favorable weather and heavier private crop reports than were in advance of the textile news from abroad as well as from some quarters in this country and the setback a fair amount of demands from the trade. There was a fair local and Southern demand from these sources. The opening was steady, 20 points net lower, with sales of 1,000 bales. Liverpool cabled for the official forenoon call prices, and most of the initial ones. Opening prices were: August, 28.80 bid; October, 32.80; December, 31.10; January, 30.42; March, 29.55; May, 28.80.

New York Sub-Treasury Gain

New York, July 26.—The sub-treasury gained $741,000 from the banks on Saturday, making a cash net gain since Friday of $19,000.

TRADING SLOW IN BOSTON

Local Market Opens Firm, but Soon Becomes Irregular; Curb Has Heavy Tone

The Boston market showed dullness at the opening, but became irregular within an hour, following the lead of N. Y. as to trend. It was as dull as during last week and there was nothing about local transactions to attract attention. The market was without breadth. There was as little trading as usual in coppers. Auto accessory shares were neglected and business in packing shares was at a minimum. American Woolen preferred began with a small gain and soon lost it. United Fruit opened with a two-point loss and recovered one. Parish & Bingham and International Cement dropped a point on first sales.

Smaller losses were shown by Copper Range, Earl Butte, New Haven, Carson Hill, Eastern Manufacturing, Orpheum and Eastern Steamship.

Among issues to make fractional gains were American Telephone, Massachusetts Gas, United Shoe, Ventura and Libby.

CURB MOVEMENT WAS MIXED.

The price movement on the Curb was mixed during the morning, but the majority of leaders were lower. Trading was of small volume. Among the most active issues were Eureka, Mutual and Madonna. Early gains were made by Albany Divide, Mutual and Black Hawk, while weak stocks at the start included Tip Top, Boston & Montana, Eureka and Madonna.

At the end of an hour Black Hawk was up 5 cents at 54 cents, and Imperial 1 cent at 12 cents, while Eureka was off 10 cents at 30 cents, and Madonna, 5, at 75. Boston & Montana had recovered its loss, and Mutual had receded and was unchanged.

Candy Sales Increasing

While it is reported that Americans are buying less in the luxury line, the does not apply to candy. More is being sold in this country than ever, although prices are record high. President Dunham of Page & Shaw says, regarding that corporation's trade: "Our home sales over the past five or six years have shown an annual increase of about 35 per cent., and will this year exceed $6,000,000, distributed through the fifteen establishments in this country, each covering a given radius. We have seven in Canada, and four in England, and about 5,000 retail agencies."

Copper Price Is Steady

No change in the copper situation was reported Saturday. The metal is selling at 19 cents a pound for third quarter delivery, and quotations are steady. Producers calculate that the copper production costs will probably be increased a cent a pound by higher railroad freight rates. Consumers are waiting to learn what the increase will be before buying metal. Uncertainty is making the market dull.

PUBLIC DEBT CUT 2 BILLIONS

Secretary Houston Also Reports an Income in Excess of Expenditures

Washington, July 26.—A reduction of $2,297,350,180 in the gross public debt, and an income above expenditures, for the first time in three years, was reported by Secretary of the Treasury Houston. He said he looked for "an important further reduction."

The surplus of receipts over expenses for the fiscal year ended June 30 was $291,221,547, treasury income totalling $6,694,565,358, while expenditures totalled $6,403,343,841. The surplus was due largely to a partial liquidation of the assets of the war finance corporation. Exclusive of the special income from that source, there was a deficit of $74,139,572.

The national debt amounted to $24,299,321,467 on June 30, and $25,486,-806,180 a year previously. At one time the obligations of the nation had mounted to their highest point—$26,596,701,648 on August 31, 1919—but the falling off maturities now completed of treasury certificates of indebtedness. So that there was a reduction of $2,297,380,180 from the peak.

While, as the result of new issues of treasury certificates in the intervals between the large income and excess profits tax installments, there may be temporary increases in both gross debt and floating debt, the Treasury Department predicts, though it is impossible to be certain, that both gross debt and floating debt will, during the first two quarters of the current year, be reduced below the figures of June 30, 1920, and that unless additional burdens should be imposed by legislation there will be an important further reduction in the last two quarters of the fiscal year.

15 TO BE NAMED LEAGUE JURISTS

Court Will Settle All Disputes and Pass on Points in Treaty

By International News Service.

London, July 26.—The structure of the new International Court of Justice and Arbitration will be the chief question discussed at the meeting of the council of the League of Nations at San Sebastian on July 30, it was announced today.

According to an outline of the plan drawn up by the international commission of jurists the court will be composed of fifteen members. They will be chosen from about 100 names submitted by the council and the assembly of the League of Nations.

The judges will have cognisance of disputes between States and not between individuals. They will interpret obscure points in treaties, decide both questions of law and fact, and will determine whether or not violations have been committed. They will have the final say in the matter of redress and reparations.

Belief is expressed in American circles that Elihu Root may represent the United States on the international court bench, if he will accept the post.

1,394,580 TONS OF PAPER USED

Yearly Consumption by American Press Is Heavy; Price of Newsprint Soaring

Washington, July 26.—American newspapers consumed 697,290 tons of paper during the first six months of 1920, or an average of 1,394,580 annually, according to a review of the paper situation made public by the Federal Trade Commission.

Current prices for newsprint paper jumped from $3.60 to $10 per hundred pounds during the year from July, 1919, to June, 1920, the review shows. Contract prices were boosted $3.50 to $4.75 for the same period.

Canada and Sweden are the largest contributors to the American market for newsprint, imports from those countries increasing considerably over those of last year. Exports of paper from the United States showed a decrease from 1919 to 1920, owing to the almost continuous shortage in this country. Argentina, China, Cuba and Brazil were the principal countries importing paper from the United States.

The domestic consumption of standard newspaper by the metropolitan dailies using between one and one-half and three-fourths of a million tons annually increased 30 per cent. over the consumption for 1918.

Medical Examiner Jones stated his belief of accidental death.

(1) To nominate for the Presidency by direct nomination and to elect by popular vote.
(2) To elect the Cabinet officers and make them responsible to Congress.
(3) To deprive the President of the power of patronage; to put all public offices as nearly as possible under Civil Service, and have appointments made by a committee of Congress.

(5) To apply the Initiative, the Referendum and the Recall to national matters.

Inherited Wealth Handicap to Man's Happiness

Upon his return to England last year from a visit here John Galsworthy, the famous novelist and writer for Hearst's Magazine, in three sentences summarized his outstanding impression of the American people.

As a whole, he said, they were too much devoted to material achievements. All their talk is how to attain great wealth or great power. No one thinks it necessary to tell young people how to attain happiness.

There passed away in Paris on Thursday an American whom many of his fellow countrymen must often have envied. He had great wealth. He wielded vast power. Was William K. Vanderbilt therefore happy? Hear his own testimony, given in his fifty-sixth year:

My life was never destined to be quite happy. It was laid along lines which I could not foresee, almost from earliest childhood. It has left me with nothing to hope for, with nothing definite to seek or strive for. Inherited wealth is a big handicap to happiness. It is as certain death to ambition as cocaine is to morality.

If a man makes money, no matter how much, he finds a certain happiness in its possession, for in the desire to increase his business he has a constant use for it. But the man who inherits it has none of this. The first satisfaction, and the greatest, that of building the foundation of a fortune, is denied him. He must labor, if he does labor, simply to add to an over-sufficiency.

Mr. Vanderbilt had unusual ability and taste. Both were proved by the part he played in determining the character of the New York Central terminal improvements in New York city.

Many people might suppose that those colossal improvements, extending over ten city blocks, required nothing but money. That is not true. They required three things:

(1) The impetus of a criminal indictment of all the directors of the New York Central by a New York Grand Jury for maintaining a smoke nuisance and death dealing tunnels;

(2) $200,000,000; and

(3) Judgment and good taste.

This Grand Central terminal and that of the Pennsylvania are the greatest single enterprises ever undertaken by private individuals or corporations. Of the two the Grand Central is much the better in design and in convenience for the public.

Its original plans were inferior in both scope and quality to those now realized. Mr. Vanderbilt insisted on their enlargement. Grand Central today reflects the vindication of his good taste and the wisdom of his judgment.

But these assertions of his innate qualities were infrequent, because, as he said, he had "nothing definite to strive for."

To be happy, a man must have a clearly defined goal and a persistent ambition to achieve it. Without effort, the finest inherent qualities wither.

Happiness does not necessarily require that the goal be reached. Relative happiness is possible in companionship with relative failure.

But it is not possible without putting forth maximum endeavor, grappling manfully with difficulties, feeling the stimulus of continuous struggle and winning the respect of comrades in the strife.

The best happiness also requires a consciousness that what one does is of value to others. The miser counting hoarded gains may think he is happy, but his feeling is a form of dementia compared with that which comes gratefully to the doer of useful service who wins some measure of sincere appreciation.

How to attain happiness is, indeed, worthy of profound study. But we are less certain than Mr. Galsworthy that it can be guided by advice. It is another of those lessons which apparently have to be learned, often painfully, in the school of experience.

At least, though, this much of conventional advice is true:

Unearned wealth and power gained through gift rather than achievement are not the aids to happiness which so many imagine.

WHEN YOUR CHILD BEHAVES BETTER THAN THE NEIGHBOR'S

That your child is morally better than the child of your neighbor may not be the result of better training, nor does it follow that you and your husband or your wife are really cleaner morally than the parents of the other child.

It is possible that your child gets its high ideals from generations back, and the devilishness of your friend's child comes also from its forefathers.

You have no right to take all the praise for the superiority of your little one, neither should you blame the parents of the wayward son or daughter.

You may be inwardly bragging of the good temper and disposition of your offspring when it may be too lackadaisical and indifferent to show any temper.

You may be proud of the dainty ways and the offish, distant manners of your little girl, when possibly she has not the strength and vigor to be the normal noisy "kid."

You are fortunate if your child has never caused you any anxiety, but you should not add sorrow and worry to the parents of the unruly boy or girl by seizing every opportunity to blacken the reputation of the erring one.

If conditions were reversed, how would you feel to know that your child is being talked about as you choose to talk about some others?

"Nothing Is Ever Going to Be Too Good for You Fellows"

That is What the Nation's Defenders Were Hearing Two Years Ago—What Is That Big Car of Yours Going to Be Doing on Friday?

If you have not yet put in that call for "Sailor" Ryan in the Little Building, to say that OF COURSE your big car will be at the disposal next Friday of the American Legion-Red Cross workers who plan to give a day's outing to the A. E. F. wounded remaining in hospitals close to Boston, the following letter may remind you of your good intentions:

East Norfolk Hospital,
July 23, 1920.

Henry J. ("Sailor") Ryan,
Little Building, Boston.

Dear Sir:—I am addressing you these few lines from the hospital in the interest of 118 men, 40 per cent. of them American Expeditionary Force wounded. We read with all pleasure in the BOSTON AMERICAN of this date the editorial "How Big is Your Heart?" and we wonder if we are "in" or "out" of this pleasure.

Are we too far away from Boston?

Our enjoyments have never amounted to much. We don't see much, 23 miles from Boston. We are all wondering if on this day, at least, we can say that the public is not ungrateful.

Yours very truly,
JAMES A. KING.

(Chicago, Ill.)

Everything is ready for Friday's big doings, "Sailor" Ryan says, EXCEPT the matter of transportation. The men are going to be given a ride about suburban Boston. They may have a glimpse of the sea. They will spend most of the afternoon as the guests of Mr. Louis K. Liggett at Chestnut Hill. There will be vaudeville, "big eats," a horse show, EVERYTHING. It will be the greatest day for fun in five years.

But how about automobiles?

That is what we asked the "Sailor."

"Well," said he, "it's funny, but there has not been the response we expected of Boston.

"There are five hundred wounded soldiers on the list of Those Who Want to be With Us, and the automobiles placed at our disposal up to date will care for only one hundred and twenty-five of them."

These are the boys we were cheering for, two years ago. "Nothing," we said, "is ever going to be too good for you fellows."

Well?
How about YOUR car for Friday?
BE a good fellow.
Call the "Sailor."

More Truth Than Poetry

The Wail of a Luckless Man

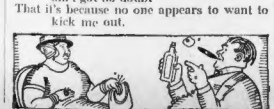
By S. E. KISER

SOME people claim it isn't luck, and have a lot to say
Concernin' wisdom, work and pluck, and pluggin' day by day;
I don't deny that there's a lot of sense in bein' wise,
But luck's the little thing you've got to find before you rise.

FOR instance, there was Arthur Small—taught school here years ago—
His teachin' wouldn't do at all; we had to tell him so;
Directors thought he was a fool; he didn't seem to care,
And, havin' nothin' else to do, he up and wrote a book or two;
Most mushy stuff I ever read, but lately I have heard it said
That Arthur was a millionaire.

AND there was Tim Burke's oldest son, a lazy sort o' lad;
At harvest time he never done a thing to help his dad;
The old man drove him off at last—just told him plain and flat
That all the monkeyin' was past. What happened after that?
He's got an income, so I hear, of half a million every year;
Doped out some kind of medicine he guarantees to keep 'em thin
When women find they're gettin' fat.

TAKE them two fellers—was it pluck that made 'em rich and gay?
Suppose that both of them had stuck, and not been drove away!
Here I've been pluggin' on for years, and I ain't got no doubt
That it's because no one appears to want to kick me out.



Letters to the Editor

Music at Nantasket

Editor Boston American:

Many people are asking why we are having so much less music at Nantasket Beach this season than last and why what we do have is of an inferior quality. The legislative appropriation was increased this year by $5,000, with the thought, no doubt, that professional musicians might ask for more pay this season. The new Metropolitan District Committee decided that the people did not need so much music this year and that an inferior quality would do, so they let the job for the Saturday and Sunday concerts to the lowest bidder, and being men of affairs they must have known that the professional musicians that make their living by their music could not compete with amateurs that use it as a side issue. If the committee think, as they claim, that the average citizen does not appreciate first-class music let them attend the daily concerts given on Boston Common by professional musicians under first-class leaders and the delusion will be dispelled, I think.

A Home on Wheels

A camping trailer of Pullman-like luxuriousness has been invented and is in use by two Californians—Lillian Pray Palmer and Oscar F. Palmer, of San Diego. It has collapsible side tents which may be extended to provide spacious sleeping compartments. The sides of the trailer are extended to form the supporting structure for these side tents. The structure is built of thin spruce sheeting covered with sailcloth, properly waterproofed with several coats of paint and then varnished. The trailer complete weighs only 650 pounds. It takes only five minutes to open ready for use. It is equipped with electric light.—Motor for July.

Ye TOWNE GOSSIP

Registered U. S. Patent Office.

By K. C. B.

MR. THOMAS M. Patten,
POSTMASTER,
NEW YORK City.
MY DEAR Tom.
I DON'T know his name,
OR HIS number.
BUT HE'S a carrier,
AND TO the apartment,
WHERE I live,
HE BRINGS the mail,
AND THERE are trees,
AND A plot of grass,
OF OUR apartment.
AND YESTERDAY,
I SAW this carrier,
WITH OUR mail,
FOOLING AROUND,
WITH A little bird.
THAT COULDN'T fly,
AND HE chased it,
AND TRIED to catch it.
AND IT fluttered,
AND GOT away,
AND HE chased it again,
UP THE sidewalk,
AND DOWN the sidewalk,
AND CAUGHT it,
AND TOOK it up,
AND PUT it away,
IN A clump of brush,
ON THE plot of grass,
AND I heard him say,
"IF YOU have any sense,
"YOU'LL KEEP off the sidewalk,
"OR SOMETHING'LL catch you,"
AND HE left it,
AND RIGHT away,
ANOTHER YOUNG bird,
THAT COULDN'T fly,
CAME FLUTTERING down,
AND TO the sidewalk,
AND HE went after that,
AND IT fluttered,
AND HE chased it,
AND HE caught them all,
AND CAUGHT it,
AND PUT it away,
AND PUT them away,
WITH THE other bird,
AND ALTOGETHER,
THERE WERE four,
AND HE caught them all,
AND PUT them away,
IN THE clump of brush,
AND ALL the time,
HE WAS delaying the mail,
AND I'M reporting him,
FOR NEGLECT of duty.

I THANK you.

GARRETT P. SERVISS' ARTICLE

LETTERS from many readers in different parts of the country indicate a very widespread and keen interest in a certain auroral display, which by occurring early in the evening secured a very large "assistance" of wondering and delighted spectators. All of the writers ask for information about the nature and causes of this spectacular kind of celestial exhibition, so that it seems desirable again to touch upon this subject in these articles and to add further particulars.

It is universally conceded by scientists that the primary cause of these displays lies in the sun, just as do the primary causes of all other aerial phenomena, such as winds, clouds, rains and atmospheric movements and changes of every sort. The sun acts upon the earth by means of its radiation of energy. Part of this energy appears in the form of heat, another part in the form of light.

The effects of these are familiar to everybody, because we have been endowed with bodily senses specially fitted to perceive them. But other parts of the sun's radiation of energy are not so directly perceptible by us.

Special Sense Needed

Among those are rays which produce electric, or electro-magnetic, effects when they encounter the earth. If we had a special electro-magnetic sense, as we have special senses for light and heat, the appearance of an aurora, or the occurrence of a "magnetic storm," would seem no more mysterious than the varying light of day, or the arrival of a hot or cold wave.

The earth, owing probably to the existence of immense quantities of iron in its interior, is a huge globular magnet, surrounded by an electrified atmosphere carrying electric currents. Now, Birkland, by suspending a spherical electro-magnet, imitating the earth, in a partially exhausted vacuum tube, and sending electric discharges through the tube, actually produced artificial "aurora-glories" around the poles of this model of the earth.

In this case the electric discharges in the tube could be likened to those produced in the rare upper atmosphere of the earth by electric impulses originating in the sun. Birkland's idea is that these impulses come from the sun in the form of cathode rays. Nordmann regards them as consisting of Hertzian waves (wireless telegraphy waves), while Svante Arrhenius thinks that they are streams of electrons driven off from the sun by the waves of light.

Whichever hypothesis is adopted, the result is the same, viz.: the conveyance of an electric influence from the sun to the earth, which influence, by affecting the electric state of the atmosphere, produces wavering, flickering and shooting lights. Recent studies of the upper strata of the atmosphere, with the aid of sounding balloons, show that there exists at great heights a strong ionization of the air, which facilitates electric discharges, and which could be produced by the passage of electric currents from the sun.

Several Forms of Aurora

The aurora presents several characteristic forms. First there is the low arch across the northern sky already described. Then there are the wonderful undulating "curtains" of light that sometimes hang under the arch. Next there are brilliant rays which radiate from a "crown," or form a luminous fan. Fourth, straight, or serpentine, ribbons sometimes stretch across the sky. Fifth, a corona surrounding an apparently black central spot may appear high in the sky glowing splendidly, and sixth, there are often detached and shifting patches of diffused light, which not infrequently change color, sometimes exhibiting a deep red flush. Spectroscopic examination shows that the atmospheric gases, especially krypton, glow in the aurora.
